CHAP. XX. INTEMPERANCE.—Ver. 1. Here is, 1. The mischief of drunkenness; "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging;" it is so to the sinner himself, it mocks him, makes a fool of him, promises him that satisfaction which it can never give him: it smiles upon him at first, but "at the last it bites;" in reflection upon it, it rages in his conscience; it is raging in the body, puts the humours into a ferment. "When the wine is in, the wit is out," and then the man, according as his natural temper is, either mocks like a fool, or rages like a madman. Drunkenness, which pretends to be a sociable thing, renders men unfit for society, for it makes them abusive with their tongues, and outrageous in their passions, chap. xxiii. 29. 2. The folly of drunkards is easily inferred thence. He that "is deceived thereby," that suffers himself to be drawn into this sin, when he is so plainly warned of the consequences of it, "is not wise," he shows that he has no right sense or consideration of things; and not only so, but he renders himself incapable of getting wisdom; for it is a sin that infatuates and besots men, and takes away their heart. A drunkard is a fool, and a fool he is like to be.—Henry.

DISHONESTY.—Ver. 14. Whilst the seller often seeks to impose on the ignorance, credulity, or necessity of his customers, by fraudulently commending or concealing the faults of his goods, or by demanding an unfair price; the buyer vilifies them far beneath his own judgment of their value; especially if he knows that the owner must sell, he will run him down in the price, and pretend many faults in the commodity: and when by these tricks of trade he has got a good bargain, he will go and boast of it among his neighbours! but is not this to boast that he is an artful knave, who met with a man poverty; open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread.

14 It is naught, [x]it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he has gone his way, then he boasteth.

15 There is gold, and a multitude of rubies: but the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel.

16 [z]Take his garment [2]that is surety for a stranger: and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

17 Bread of [3]deceit [b]is sweet to a man; but afterwards [c]his mouth shall be filled with gravel.

18 Every [d]purpose is established by counsel: [e]and with good advice make war.

19 He [f]that goeth about as a talebearer revealeth secrets: therefore [g]meddle not with him that [4]flattereth with his lips.

20 Whoso curseth his father or his mother, his [*]lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness.

21 An inheritance may be [k]gotten hastily at the beginning; [l]but the end thereof shall not be blessed.

22 Say not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the LORD, and he shall save thee.

23 Divers [o]weights are an abomination unto the LORD; and [†]a false balance is not good.

24 [p]Man's goings are of the LORD; [q]how can a man then understand his own way?

25 It is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and [s]after vows to make enquiry.

26 A wise king scattereth the wicked, and [u]bringeth the wheel over them.[3]

27 The [x]spirit of man is the [‡]candle of the LORD, [y]searching all the inward parts of the belly.

28 Mercy and truth preserve the king; and his throne is upholden by mercy.

29 The glory of young men is their strength: and [c]the beauty of old men is the gray head.

30 The blueness of a wound [§]cleanseth away evil: so do stripes the inward parts of the belly.

CHAP. XXI.

THE king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water:[1] he turneth it whithersoever he will.

2 Every way of a man is [c]right in his own eyes: but [d]the LORD pondereth the hearts.

3 To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice.

4 [*]An [f]high look, and a proud heart, [§]and the [†]plowing of the wicked, is sin.

5 The [h]thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness; but [i]of every one that is hasty only to want.

6 The [k]getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.

7 The robbery of the wicked shall [‡]destroy them; because they refuse to do judgment.

8 The way of man is froward and strange; but as for the pure, his work is right.

9 It is [q]better to dwell in a corner of the house-top,[2] than with a [§]brawling woman in a wide house.

10 The soul of the wicked desireth evil; his neighbour [t]findeth no favour in his eyes.

11 When the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise: and [u]when the wise is instructed, he receiveth knowledge.

12 The righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked: but God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness.

13 Whoso [x]stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall [b]cry himself, but shall not be heard.

14 A gift [d]in secret pacifieth anger; and a reward in the bosom strong wrath.

15 It is [e]joy to the just to do judgment: but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

16 The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall [b]remain in the congregation of the dead.

17 He that [l]loveth [*]pleasure shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.

18 The wicked shall be a ransom[3] for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright.

19 It is better to dwell in the [†]wilderness, than with a contentious and an angry woman.

20 There is [m]treasure to be desired and [n]oil in the dwelling of the wise; [o]but a foolish man spendeth it up.

21 He that followeth after righteousness and mercy findeth life, righteousness, and honour.

22 A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty, and casteth down the strength of the confidence thereof.

23 Whoso [s]keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles.

24 Proud and [t]haughty scorner is his name, who dealeth in [‡]proud wrath.

25 The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour.

26 He [x]coveteth greedily all the day long: but [y]the righteous giveth and spareth not.

27 The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination: how much more, when he bringeth it [*]with a wicked mind?

28 A [†]false witness shall perish: but [b]the man that heareth [4]speaketh constantly.

29 A wicked man [c]hardeneth his face: but as for the upright, he [‡]directeth his way.

simple enough to be cheated?—"As fraud makes men dispraise that to which they have a mind; so, in the other cases, out of ignorance, or out of partiality or faction, nay, sometimes out of natural disposition, men disparage what is praiseworthy, and commend that which is good for little.

TALE-BEARING.—Ver. 19. The tale-bearer is commonly a flatterer. Thus he insinuates himself into the favour, and pries into the secrets, of one person or family: and then he goes and tells all he knows, with a malevolent comment, in another family; accompanying his slanders of the absent with flattery of those present, and in both addressing himself to the corruptions of the human heart. Whoever ridicules or reviles the absent, and flatters those present, may safely be deemed a tale-bearer; and in the next company he will act the same part: who then would have any thing to do with so infamous a character?

INTEGRITY.—Ver. 25. Tithes, firstlings, first-fruits, and other things, were by the law holy to the Lord; but many Israelites would be tempted secretly to appropriate a part of them to their own use; and thus they would be caught in a snare, and involved in guilt. In like manner, men would often vow inconsiderately, and then be tempted to make inquiry how to elude the vow, or excuse the infringing of it. This sin likewise exposed them to sharp rebukes, from which they would have been preserved, if they had previously inquired whether they would cheerfully perform their vow; or having vowed, if, depending on God, they had honestly submitted to the present loss.—"A sacrilegious man finds devices to rob God of things that are consecrated to God, and then makes vows, in hopes by them to expiate his sacrilege."—"A man vows in his distress to give something to God; but having obtained his desire, studies how he may be loosed from his obligations." [Bp. Patrick.]—Scott.

CHAP. XXI. INDUSTRY.—Ver. 5. Here is, 1. The way to be rich. If we would live plentifully and comfortably in the world, we must be diligent in our business, and not shrink from the toil and trouble of it, but prosecute it closely, improving all advantages and opportunities for it, and doing what we do with all our might; yet we must not be hasty in it, nor hurry ourselves and others with it, but keep doing fairly and softly, which, we say, goes far in a day. With diligence there must be contrivance; the thoughts of the diligent are as necessary as the hand of the diligent. Forecast is as good as work. Seest thou a man thus prudent and diligent? He will have enough to live on. 2. The way to be poor. Those that are hasty, that are rash and inconsiderate in their affairs, and will not allow time to think, that are greedy of gain, by right or wrong, and make haste to be rich by unjust practices, or unwise projects, they are in the ready road to poverty. Their thoughts and contrivances, by which they hope to raise themselves, will ruin them.—Henry.

OPPRESSION OF THE POOR.—Ver. 13. They who oppress the poor, by beating down their wages, till they cannot earn the necessaries of life, and then refuse to hear their complaints: and they who will not relieve, according to their ability, those who cry unto them in distress; and such magistrates as neglect to do the poor justice against their rich oppressors, "evidently stop their ears at the cry of the poor." The number of beggars in our streets, many of whom are poor through idleness and drunkenness, or mere impostors in their apparent distress, and who spend all they can extort by pathetic cries, upon their vicious indulgences; render an "apparent stopping of the ears at the cry of the poor," absolutely unavoidable. Certainly they who are known to be honest and industrious, and in real distress, have by far a preferable claim to assistance: few are able to contribute to both classes, and doubtless discretion should direct the exercise of charity; for every shilling a man can spare is so much committed to him, to be made the best use of that he can.—But he who selfishly and unfeelingly disregards the sufferings of the poor in general, without contributing his portion to relieve them, may now mock God with hypocritical prayers, but he will not be heard; and he may at length cry for a drop of water to cool his tongue, and not obtain even that small alleviation of his misery: "For he shall have judgment without mercy, who hath showed no mercy."—Scott.

GOD OUR STRENGTH.—Ver. 30. The designing, busy part of mankind are here directed, in all their counsels and undertakings, to have their eye to God, and to believe, 1. That there can be no success "against God," and therefore they must never act in opposition to him, in contempt of his commands, or in contradiction to his counsels. Though they think they have "wisdom," and "understanding," and "counsel," the best politics and politicians, on their side, yet, if it be "against the Lord," it cannot prosper long, it shall not prevail at last. 2. That there can be no success without God, and therefore they must never act but in dependence on him. Be the cause ever so good, and the patrons of it ever so strong, and wise, and faithful, and the means of carrying it on, and gaining the point, ever so probable, still they must acknowledge God, and take him along with them. Means, indeed, are to be used; "the horse" must be "prepared against the day of battle," and the foot, too, they must be armed and disciplined; "but," after all, "safety" and salvation "is of the Lord;" he can save without armies, but armies cannot without him; and therefore he must be sought to, and trusted in, for success, and, when success is obtained, he must have all the glory. [illegible] day of battle" our great concern [illegible] —Henry.

CHAP. XXII. EARLY TRAINING.—Ver. 6. Here is, 1. A great duty enjoined, particularly to those that are the parents and instructors of children, in order to the propagating of wisdom, that it may not die with them. "Train up children" in that age of vanity, to keep them from the sins and snares of it; in that learning age, to prepare them for what they are designed for. "Catechise" them, initiate them, keep them under discipline; "train" them as soldiers, who are taught to handle their arms, keep rank, and observe the word of command. "Train" them up, not in the way they "would" go, (the bias of their corrupt hearts would draw them aside,) but in the way they "should" go, the way in which, if you love them, you would have them go. "Train up a child according as he is capable," so some take it; with a gentle hand, as nurses feed children, little and often, Deut. vi. 7. 2. A good reason for it, taken from the great advantage of this care and pains with children; when they "grow up," when they "grow old," it is to be hoped they "will not depart from it." Good impressions made upon them then will abide upon them all their days. Ordinarily, the vessel retains the savour with which it was first seasoned. Many, indeed, have departed from the good way in which they were trained up; Solomon himself did; but it may be a means of their recovering themselves, as it is supposed Solomon did. At least, the parents will have the comfort of having done their duty, and used the means.

RASH SURETYSHIP.—Ver. 26, 27. We have here, as often before, a caution against suretyship, as a thing both imprudent and unjust. 1. We must not associate ourselves, nor contract an intimacy with men of broken fortunes and reputations, who need, and will urge their friends to be bound for them, that they may cheat their neighbours, to feed their lusts, and, by keeping up a little longer, may do the more damage at last to those that give them credit. 2. We must not cheat people of their money, by "striking hands" ourselves, or "becoming surety for others," when we "have not to pay." If a man by the Divine Providence is disabled to pay his debts, he ought to be pitied and helped; but he that takes up money or goods himself, or is bound for another, when he knows that he has not wherewithal to pay, or that which he has is so settled, that the creditors cannot come at it, he does in effect pick his neighbour's pocket, and though in all cases compassion is to be used, yet he may thank himself if the law have its course, and his "bed" be "taken from under him," which might not be taken for a pawn to secure a debt, Exod. xxii. 26, 27. For if a man appeared to be so poor that he had nothing else to give for security, he ought to be relieved, and it was honestly done to own it. 3. We must not ruin our own estates and families; every man ought to be just to himself, and to his wife and children; those are not so who live above what they have, who, by the mismanagement of their own affairs, or by incumbering themselves with the debts of others, waste what they have, and bring themselves to poverty.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. UNCERTAINTY OF WEALTH.—Ver. 5. Riches are very uncertain things, certainly they are so, "they make themselves wings, and flee away." The more we cause our eyes to fly upon them, the more likely they are to flee away from us. 1. Riches will leave us; those that hold them ever so fast, cannot hold them always, cannot hold them long; either they must be taken from us, or we must be taken from them. The goods are said to flow away as a stream, Job xx. 28, here to flee away as a bird. 2. Perhaps they may leave us suddenly; when we have taken a great deal of pains for them, and begin to take a great deal of pride and pleasure in them. The covetous man sits hatching upon his wealth, and brooding over it till it is fledged, as the young ones under the hen, and then it is gone. Or, as if a man should be fond of a flight of wild fowl that light in his field, and call them his own, because they are upon his ground, whereas if he offer to come near them, they take wing immediately, and are gone to another man's field. 3. The wings they flee away upon are of their own making: they have in themselves the principles of their own corruption, their own moth and rust. They are wasting in their own nature, and like a handful of dust, which, if it be grasped, slips through the fingers. Snow will last a while, and look pretty, if it be left to lie on the ground where it fell; but if gathered up, and laid in the bosom, it is dissolved and gone immediately. 4. They go irresistibly and irrecoverably, "as an eagle toward heaven," that flies strongly, there is no stopping her, and flies out of sight and out of call, there is no bringing her back; thus do riches leave men, and leave them in grief and vexation, if they set their hearts upon them.—Henry.

GLUTTONY AND INTEMPERANCE.—Ver. 20—21. "Be not," says Solomon, "amongst winebibbers, amongst riotous eaters of flesh: for the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty," and the "drowsiness" which such excess occasions "will clothe a man with rags." Mark, says he, and learn wisdom by the painful experience of other men: Who has more misery and sorrow than his neighbours? Who is always engaged in riots, fightings, or lawsuits? Who renders himself despised or hated by his babblings? Who is frequently covered with bruises, or is laid up with dangerous wounds, when neither called to defend himself, nor his friends, nor his country? Who carries the marks of his distempered body, in the redness of his eyes, and in his bloated countenance? Do you not see that these are the wretched appendages of those "that tarry long at the wine, that go to seek mixed wine?" Do you envy their advantages? or do you wish to be exempted from such miseries? If you desire the latter, then beware of contracting the habit of 19 Hear thou, my son, and be wise, and guide thine heart in the way.

20 Be [e]not among winebibbers; among riotous eaters of [f]flesh:

21 For [g]the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty: and [h]drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags.

22 Hearken unto thy father that begat thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old.

23 Buy the truth, and sell it not;[3] also wisdom, and instruction, and understanding.

29 [x]Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath [y]redness of eyes?

30 They that [z]tarry long at the wine: they that go to seek [a]mixed wine.[4]

31 [b]Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.

32 At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an [†]adder.

33 Thine [c]eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things.

CHAP. XXIV.

BE [a]not thou envious against evil men, [b]neither desire to be with them:

2 For their heart studieth destruction, and their lips talk of mischief.

3 Through wisdom is an house builded; and by understanding it is established:

4 And by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches.

5 A wise man is *strong; yea, a man of knowledge [†]increaseth strength.

6 For [h]by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counsellors there is safety.

7 Wisdom is [k]too high for a fool: he [l]openeth not his mouth in the gate.

8 He [m]that deviseth to do evil shall be called a mischievous person.

9 The [n]thought of foolishness[1] is sin: and [o]the scorner is an abomination to men.

10 If [p]thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is [†]small.

11 If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain;

12 If thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render to every man according to his works?

13 My son, [u]eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb, which is sweet [§]to thy taste:

14 So [x]shall the knowledge of wisdom be unto thy soul: [y]when thou hast found it, then [z]there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.

15 Lay not wait, O wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous; [b]spoil not his resting place:

16 For [c]a just man falleth seven times,[2] and riseth up again: but the wicked shall fall into mischief.

17 Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth; and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth:

18 Lest the LORD see it, and it [i]displease him, [f]and he turn away his wrath from him.

19 *Fret not thyself because of evil men, [g]neither be thou envious at the wicked:

20 For there shall be no reward to the evil man; [i]the [†]candle of the wicked shall be put out.

21 My son, fear thou the LORD and the king: and [l]meddle not with them that are [‡]given to change:

22 For [m]their calamity shall rise suddenly; and [n]who knoweth the ruin of them both?

23 These [o]things also belong to the wise. [p]It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment.

24 He [q]that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous; him shall the people curse, nations shall abhor him:

25 But to them that rebuke him shall be delight, and [§]a good blessing shall come upon them.

26 Every man shall kiss his lips[3] that [l]giveth a right answer.

27 [u]Prepare thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field; and afterwards build thine house.

drinking beyond the bounds of strict temperance. The wine may sparkle in the glass, and appear beautiful to the eye, and drunken poets may write very ingenious things in praise of it; it may also please the palate, and exhilarate mind for a moment; but at "the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." Whatever exceeds exact sobriety, is poisoned: it is far worse than the fabled cup of Circe, which transformed men into brutes; for it inflames the passions, and fits them for every hateful crime: it ruins a man's constitution and character, and tends to beggar his family; it is an incentive to the basest lusts, and causes many to fall into that deep ditch and narrow pit, from which so few escape with their lives; making them an easy prey to those bad women who lie in wait for them, and whose constant employment it is "to increase the transgressors amongst men:" it looses the tongue to utter every thing impious, polluting and provoking: it leads a man without precaution to run himself into unnumbered dangers; and yet it fascinates him into such a love for his cruel oppressor and his galling chains, that he only sleeps to recruit himself, that when he awakes he may return to his destructive indulgence! Who, then, that has common sense would contract such a habit, or sell himself to an iniquity which tends to such accumulated guilt and misery, and exposes a man every day to the danger of dying intoxicated and awaking in hell? Thus the wisdom and word of God warns men against this common and fatal vice: and He exhorts young persons to notice the admonitions of their parents to this effect: "Hearken," says he, "unto thy father that begat thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old." Their counsel is salutary, their authority from God, the child's obligations are great, and the guilt of those that despise their aged parents is exceedingly heinous. And it should be the aim and honest ambition of every young person to be the joy, comfort, and honour of his aged father and mother, in their declining years.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. PHILANTHROPY.—Ver. 11, 12. 1. If any be set upon by force and violence, and it be in our power to rescue them, we ought to do it. Nay, if we see any through ignorance exposing themselves to danger, or falling in distress, as travellers upon the road, ships at sea, or any the like, it is our duty, though it be with peril to ourselves, to hasten with help to them, and not "forbear to deliver them," not be slack, or remiss, or indifferent, in such a case. 2. An answer to the excuse that is commonly made for the omission of this duty. Thou wilt say, "'Behold, we knew it not;' we were not aware of the imminency of the danger the person was in; we could not be sure that he was innocent, nor did we know how to prove it, nor which way to do any thing in favour of him, else we would have helped him." It is easy to make such an excuse as this, sufficient to expiate the censures of men, for perhaps they cannot disprove us, when we say, "We knew it not;" or, "We forgot." It is not so easy with such excuses to evade the judgment of God; and to the discovery of that we lie open, and by the determination of that we must abide. Now, (1.) God "ponders the heart, and keeps the soul;" he keeps an eye upon it, observes all the motions of it; its most secret thoughts and intents are all naked and open before him. It is his prerogative, and that in which he glories; Jer. xviii. 10, "I the Lord search the heart." He "keeps the soul;" holds it in life. This is a good reason why we should be tender of the lives of others, and do all we can to preserve them, because our lives have been precious in the sight of God, and he has graciously kept them. (2.) He knows and considers whether the excuse we make be true or no; whether it was because we did not know it, or whether the true reason was not because we did not love our neighbour as we ought, but were selfish, and regardless both of God and man. Let this serve to silence all our frivolous pleas, by which we think to stop the mouth of conscience when it charges us with the omission of plain duty. "Does not he that ponders the heart consider it?" 3. He will judge us accordingly. As his knowledge cannot be imposed upon, so his justice cannot be biassed, but he will "render to every man according to his works," not only the commission of evil works, but the omission of good works.

VINEYARD OF THE SLUGGARD.—Ver. 34. Here is, 1, The view which Solomon took of "the field and vineyard of the slothful" man. He did not go on purpose to see it, but, as he passed by, observing the fruitfulness of the ground, as it is very proper for travellers to do, and his subjects' management of their land, as it is very proper for magistrates to do, he cast his eye upon a field, and a vineyard, unlike all the rest; for though the soil was good, yet there was nothing growing in them but "thorns and nettles;" not here and there one, but they were all overrun with weeds; and if there had been any fruit, it would have been eaten up by the beasts, for there was no fence, "the stone wall was broken down." 2. The reflections which he made upon it. He paused a little, "and considered it, looked" again "upon it, and received instruction." He did not break out into any passionate censures of the owner, did not call him any ill names, but he endeavoured himself to get good by the observation, and to be quickened by it to diligence. Solomon reckoned that he "received instruction" by this sight, though it did not suggest to him any new notion or lesson, but only put him in mind of an observation he himself had formerly made, of the ridiculous folly of the sluggard, who, when he has needful work to do, lies dozing in bed, and cries, "Yet a little sleep, a little slumber," and still is will be a little more, till he [illegible] out, and, instead of being fitted by sleep for business, [illegible] stupified, and made good for nothing.

CHAP. XXV. PUBLICATION OF THE PROVERBS.—Ver. 1. The publishers were Hezekiah's servants, who, it is likely, herein acted as his servants, being appointed by him to do this good service to the church, among other good offices that he did "in the law and in the commandments," 2 Chron. xxxi. 21. Whether he employed the prophets in this work, as Isaiah, Hosea, or Micah, who lived in his time, or some that were trained up in the schools of the prophets, or some of the priests and Levites, to whom we find him giving a charge concerning divine things, 2 Chron. xxix. 4, or, as the Jews think, his princes and ministers of state, who were more properly called his servants, is not certain; if it was done by Eliakim, and Joah, and Shebna, it was no diminution to their character. They copied out these proverbs from the records of Solomon's reign, and published them as an appendix to the former edition of this book. It may be a piece of very good service to the church to publish other men's works that have lain hid in obscurity, perhaps a great while. Some think they culled these out of the 3000 proverbs which Solomon spake, 1 Kings iv. 32, leaving out those that were physical, and that pertained to natural philosophy, and preserving such only as were divine and moral; and in this collection some observe that special regard was had to those observations which concern kings and their administration.—Henry.

MEEKNESS.—Ver. 8.—10. Precipitation in commencing contention, can arise only from fierce passions, pride, and ignorance, or forgetfulness of consequences. This is equally applicable to engaging in foreign wars, or in civil dissensions; and to entering on lawsuits, controversies, or any other private contests. They who are most eager to contend, are generally least able to maintain their ground; consequently, their boastings and menaces frequently end in their own disgrace, and they bring themselves into inextricable difficulties. To avoid this, man should previously consider what they are about to do; and if they have been materially injured, they should calmly expostulate with their offending neighbour, and state to him their earnest desire of agreement [illegible] reasonable terms, and their readiness to compromise or reference, to render [illegible] in any case, dividing [illegible]

SELF-COMMAND.—Ver. 28. Here is, 1, The good character of a wise and virtuous man implied; he is one that has "rule over his own spirit," he maintains the government of himself, and of his own appetites and passions, and does not suffer them to rebel against reason and conscience. 2. The bad case of a vicious man, who has not this rule over his own spirit, who, when temptations to excess in eating or drinking are before him, has no government of himself, when he is provoked, breaks out into exorbitant passions, such a one is "like a city that is broken down, and without walls;" all that is good goes out, and forsakes him, all that is evil breaks in upon him, he lies exposed to all the temptations of Satan, and becomes an easy prey to that enemy; he is also liable to many troubles and vexations.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVI. HOW TO ANSWER A FOOL.—Ver. 4. See here the noble security of the scripture-style, which seems to contradict itself, but really does not. Wise men have need to be directed how to deal with fools; and they have never more need of wisdom than in dealing with such, to know when to keep silence, and when to speak, for there may be a time for both. 1. In some cases, a wise man will not set his wit to that of a fool, so far as to "answer him according to his folly." "If he boast of himself, do not answer him by boasting of thyself. If he rail and talk passionately, do not thou rail and talk passionately too. If he tell one great lie, do not thou tell another to match it. If he calumniate thy friends, do not thou calumniate his. If he banter, do not answer him in his own language, 'lest thou be like him;' even thou, who knowest better things, who hast more sense, and hast been better taught." 2. Yet, in other cases, a wise man will use his wisdom for the conviction of a fool; when, by taking notice of what he says, there may be hopes of doing good, or, at least, preventing further mischief, either to himself or others. "If thou have reason to think that thy silence will be deemed an evidence of the weakness of thy cause, or of thine own weakness, in such a case, answer him, and let it be an answer ad hominem—to the man, beat him at his own weapons, and that will be an answer ad rem—to the point, or as good as one. If he offer any thing that looks like an argument, answer that, and suit thine answer to his case. If he think, because thou dost not answer him, that what he says is unanswerable, then give him an answer, 'lest he be wise in his own conceit,' and boast of a victory."

DILIGENCE, AGAINST.—Ver. 7. See here, 1. What pains men take to do mischief, [illegible] or concealing it with a profession of [illegible] to [illegible] violent dealing will return upon their own heads; they shall themselves "fall into the pit they digged," and the stone they rolled "will return upon them," Ps. vii. 15, 16; ix. 15, 16. ———Nec lex est justior ulla

Quam necis artifices arte perire sua—

Nor is there any law more just than that the contrivers of destruction should perish by their own arts.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVII. FRIENDSHIP.—Ver. 10. A good reason is given why we should thus value true friendship, and be choice of it. 1. Because of the pleasure of it. There is a great deal of "sweetness" in conversing and consulting with a cordial friend; it is like "ointment and perfume," which are very grateful to the smell, and exhilarate the spirits, it "rejoices the heart," the burthen of care is made lighter by unbosoming ourselves to our friend, and it is a great satisfaction to us to have his sentiments concerning our affairs. "The sweetness" of friendship lies not in hearty mirth, and hearty laughter, but in "hearty counsel," faithful advice, sincerely given and without flattery; by counsel of the soul, so the word is; counsel which reaches the case, and comes to the heart; counsel about soul-concerns, Ps. lxvi. 16. We should reckon that the most pleasant conversation, which is about spiritual things, and promotes the prosperity of the soul. 2. Because of the profit and advantage of it, especially in a "day of calamity;" when we are here advised not to go into a "brother's house," not to expect relief from a kinsman, merely for kindred-sake, for the obligation of that commonly goes little further than calling cousin, and fails when it comes to the trial of a real kindness; but, rather, to apply ourselves to our neighbours, who are at hand, and will be ready to help us at an exigence. It is wisdom to oblige them by being neighbourly, and we shall have the benefit of it in distress, by finding them so to us, chap. xviii. 24.

INCURABLE FOLLY.—Ver. 22. Solomon hath said, chap. xxii. 15, "The foolishness which "is bound in the heart of a child may be driven out by the rod of correction," for then the mind is to be moulded, the vicious habits not having taken root; but here he shows, that, if it be not done then, it will be next to impossible to do it afterward; if the disease be inveterate, there is a danger of its being incurable. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin?" Observe, 1. Some are so bad that rough and severe methods must be used with them, after gentle means have been tried in vain; they must be "brayed in a mortar." God will take this way with them by his judgments; the magistrates must take this way with them by the rigour of the law. Force must be used with those that will not be ruled by reason, and love, and their own interest. 2. Some are so incorrigibly bad, that even those rough and severe methods do not answer the end, their "foolishness will not depart from them;" so fully are their "hearts set in them to do evil;" they are often under the rod, and yet not humbled; in the furnace, and yet not refined; but, like Ahaz, trespass yet more; 2 Chron. xxviii. 22; and what remains then, but that they should be rejected as reprobate silver?—Henry.

CHAP. XXVIII. AN EVIL CONSCIENCE.—Ver. 1. See here what continual frights they are subject to that go on in wicked ways; guilt in the conscience makes men a terror to themselves, so that they are ready "to flee when none pursues;" like one that absconds for debt, who thinks every one he meets a baliff. Though they pretend to be easy, there are secret fears which haunt them wherever they go, so that they fear where no present or imminent danger is, Ps. liii. 5. They that have made God their Enemy, and know it, cannot but see the whole creation at war with them, and therefore can have no true enjoyment of themselves, no confidence, no courage, but a "fearful looking for of judgment." Sin makes men cowards.

TYRANNY.—Ver. 15. It is written indeed, "Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people;" but, if he be a wicked ruler that oppresses the people, especially the poor people, robbing them of the little they have, and making a prey of them, whatever we may call him, this scripture calls him "a roaring lion, and a ranging bear." 1. In respect of his character; he is brutish, barbarous, and blood-thirsty, he is rather to be put among the beasts of prey, the wildest and most savage, than to be reckoned of that noble rank of beings whose glory is reason and humanity. 2. In respect of the mischief they do to their subjects; they are dreadful as the "roaring lion," who makes the forest tremble; they are devouring as a hungry "bear," and the more necessitous they are, the more mischief they do, and the more greedy of gain they are.—Henry.

SELF-CONFIDENCE.—Ver. 26. When a man has that confidence in his own good understanding, intentions, and dispositions, that he fears no deception; and is fully satisfied that he shall act up to the purposes which he hath formed under conviction, or in sickness and danger; he proves himself to be very ignorant and foolish. He does not consider how differently he will be affected, when in health and safety, and under temptations, than he was in contrary circumstances; he trusts the worst of all deceivers, which hath cheated him a thousand times; and he might as well expect that the sea would be always calm, the water always frozen, or the wind always west, because they are sometimes so. But he, who walks wisely, or circumspectly, distrusts himself, trusts understanding and knowledge the state thereof shall be prolonged.

3 A poor man that oppresseth the poor is like a sweeping rain [†]which leaveth no food.

4 They that forsake the law praise the wicked: [g]but such as keep the law contend with them.

5 Evil men understand not judgment: but they that seek the LORD understand all things.

6 Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.

7 Whoso keepeth the law is a wise son: [1]but he that [‡]is a companion of riotous men shameth his father.

8 He [m]that by usury and [§]unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will [n]pity the poor.[1]

9 He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law,[2] [p]even his prayer shall be abomination.

10 Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit: but the upright shall have good things in possession.

11 The rich man is wise in [‖]his own conceit; but the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out.

12 When righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory: [y]but when the wicked rise, a man is [*]hidden.

13 He [z]that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth [b]and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

14 [c]Happy is the man that feareth alway: [d]but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief.

15 As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The prince that wanteth understanding is also a great oppressor: but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

17 A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.

18 Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved: [m]but he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

19 He [n]that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: [o]but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

20 A faithful man shall abound with blessings: but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be [†]innocent.

21 To have respect of persons is not good: for, for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

22 He that [‡]hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye,[3] and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

1 The reason why so many estates are blasted so soon, and brought to nothing, is, that men do not render to God the duty and tribute which He has charged upon their estates for Himself and the poor; and then it is no wonder if God in His providence turn them out of their possession, and give their estate to others, who will be better tenants, and more careful to pay the duties He requires.-BEVERIDGE.

3 Whoso loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: but [g]he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

4 The king by judgment establisheth the land: but [‡]he that receiveth gifts[1] overthroweth it.

5 A man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet.

6 In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare: but the righteous doth sing and rejoice.

7 The righteous [n]considereth the cause of the poor: [o]but the wicked regardeth not to know it.

8 [p]Scornful men [§]bring a city into a snare: but [q]wise men turn away wrath.

9 If [r]a wise man contendeth with a foolish man, whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest.[2]

10 [‖]The bloodthirsty hate the upright: but the just seek his soul.

11 A fool uttereth all his mind: but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards.

12 If a ruler hearken to lies, all his servants are wicked.

13 The poor and *the deceitful man [y]meet together: the LORD lighteneth both their eyes.

14 The king that faithfully judgeth the poor, his throne shall be established for ever.

15 The rod and reproof give wisdom: but a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame.

16 When the wicked are multiplied, trans-in the Lord, shuns temptation, and prays continually to be upheld by the grace of God: and thus he will be delivered from those snares in which the other is entangled. A man's confidence in his own capacity and ability, for success in any undertaking, is implied in the general interpretation of trusting his own heart: but the inspired writer's strong and decided language, no doubt was intended to convey a more general and spiritual instruction.—Scott.

BENEFICENCE.—Ver. 27. Here is, 1. A promise to the charitable; "He that gives to the poor" shall himself be never the poorer for so doing, he "shall not lack;" if he have but little, and so be in danger of lacking, let him give out of his little, and that will prevent it from coming to nothing; as the bounty of the widow of Sarepta to Elijah, for whom she made a little cake first when what she had was reduced to a handful of meal. If he have much, let him give much out of it, and that will prevent its growing less; he and his shall not want what is given in pious charity. What we give we have. 2. A threatening to the uncharitable; "He that hides his eyes," that he may not see the miseries of the poor, nor read their petitions, lest his eye should affect his heart, and extort some relief from him, he "shall have many a curse," both from God and man, and neither causeless, and therefore they shall come. Woful is the condition of that man who has the word of God, and the prayers of the poor, against him.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIX. FLATTERY.—Ver. 5. Flatterers "spread a net for their feet." 1. "For the neighbour's feet," whom they "flatter;" they have an ill design in it, they would not speak thus fair, but that they hope to make an advantage of them; and it is therefore wisdom to suspect those who flatter us, that they are secretly laying a snare for us, and to stand on our guard accordingly. Or it has an ill effect on those who are flattered; it puffs them up with pride, and makes them conceited and confident of themselves, and so proves a net that entangles them in sin. 2. "For their own feet;" so some understand it. He that flatters others, in expectation that they will return his compliments, and flatter him, does but make himself ridiculous and odious even to those he flatters.

DISCRETION.—Ver. 11. Note, 1. It is a piece of weakness to be very open; he is "a fool" who "utters all his mind," who tells every thing he knows, and has in his mouth instantly whatever he has in his thoughts, and can keep no counsel; who, whatever is started in discourse, shoots his bolt; who, when he is provoked, will say any thing that comes uppermost, whoever is reflected upon by it; who, when he is to speak of any business, will say all he thinks, and yet never thinks he says enough, whether choice or refuse, corn or chaff, pertinent or impertinent, you shall have it all. 2. It is a piece of wisdom to be upon the reserve; "A wise man" will not "utter all his mind" at once, but will take time for a second thought, or reserve the present thought for a fitter time, when it will be more pertinent, and likely to answer his intention; will not deliver himself in a continued speech, or starched discourse, but with pauses, that he may hear what is to be objected, and answer it.

SPIRITUAL DARKNESS.—Ver. 18. See here, 1. The misery of the people that want a settled ministry; "Where there is no vision," no prophet to expound the law, no priest or Levite to teach the good knowledge of the Lord, no means of grace, the word of the Lord is scarce, there is "no open vision;" 1 Sam. iii. 1; where it is so, "the people perish;" the word has many significations, any of which will apply here: (1.) "The people are made naked," stripped of their ornaments, and so exposed to shame; stripped of their armour, and so exposed to danger. How bare does a place look, without Bibles and ministers, and what an easy prey is it to the enemy of souls! (2.) "The people rebel," not only against God, but against their prince; good preaching would make good subjects, but, for want of it, they are turbulent and factious and despise dominions, because they know no better. (3.) "The people are idle," or they play, as the scholars are apt to do when the master is absent; they do nothing to any good purpose, but stand all the day idle, and sporting in the market-place, for want of instruction what to do, and how to do it. (4.) "They are scattered as sheep having no shepherd," for want of the masters of assemblies to call them and keep them together, Mark vi. 34. They are scattered from God and their duty by apostasies, from one another by divisions; God is provoked to scatter them by his judgments, 2 Chron. xv. 3, 5. (5.) "They perish:" they are "destroyed for lack of knowledge," Hos. iv. 6. See what reason we have to be thankful to God for the plenty of open vision which we enjoy! 2. The felicity of a people that have not only a settled, but a successful ministry among them; the people that hear and "keep the law," among whom religion is uppermost; "happy" are such a people, and every particular person among them. It is not having the law, but obeying it, and living up to it, that will entitle us to blessedness.—Henry.

CHAP. XXX. APPENDIX TO THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.—Ver. 1. These last two chapters form an appendix to the book of Proverbs, it is probable, annexed to it by the men of Hezekiah. It may be supposed that the names of Agur, and Jakeh his father, were well known in Israel at that time. The expression, "the prophecy," or the burden, seems to imply, that these instructions were communicated to the church as a divine revelation, and their claim has been very long been allowed of. Agur "spake unto Ithiel, and unto Ucal." The word Ithiel signifies "God with me;" and Ucal "a mighty one!" (literally, I shall be able;) and some have thought that they refer more to the subject of Agur's prophecy, than to the persons whom he addressed. But it is the more common opinion, that they were Agur's disciples, or pupils, who had proposed some questions to him, which he answered as follows.—The notion that Solomon was meant under the name Agur, though held by some of the fathers, is now generally given up.

AGUR'S PRAYER.—Ver. 7—9. Agur's mind was fixed upon the Lord, though he did not immediately mention him. He especially desired two things to be granted him before, or until, his death, as the context seems to imply. The one relates directly to spiritual blessings; "Remove far from me vanity, and lies;" that is, "Deliver me entirely from guilt and sin; from idolatry, error, delusion, and temptation, and from having the vanities of the world for my portion." The other relates to temporal things, yet in subserviency to heavenly. Agur prayed against both poverty and riches, not so much because of the hardships of the one, and the anxious encumbrances of the other, as because of the temptations to which they would severally expose him. If he lived in great affluence, he feared lest he should grow self-indulgent and forgetful of God; and so, at length be induced to deny his overruling providence, his authority, or even his existence, saying, like Pharoah, "Who is the LORD?" If he were reduced to extreme poverty, he feared lest he should be tempted to dishonesty, and then to perjury, in order to prevent detection and punishment; or, as some interpret it, to murmur against God, and through impatience to speak impious words of him. He, therefore, wisely prayed for a mediocrity, that he might be kept at a distance from these temptations: he asked food convenient for him, "daily bread," suited to his station, his family, and his real good.—There is a remarkable coincidence betwixt this prayer and several clauses of the Lord's prayer.

THREE MYSTERIES.—Ver. 18—20. The path of the eagle through the air, that of the serpent on the rock, and that of the ship through the sea, cannot be traced, nor doth any one exactly follow another in the same course. So, artful men insinuate themselves into the affections of young women, and seduce them to their ruin, by an almost an infinity of stratagems which can never be all unravelled. Thus, also, the adulterous wife uses much ingenuity to impose on her husband, to shun detection, and to escape shame and punishment, by schemes and devices which cannot all be enumerated. Every new crime intended, or committed, gives rise to some new artifice; as the ship, in some degree, deviates every time from the course which it steered before. The object of the seducer is to prevail over his prey, and that of the adulteress to conceal her guilt; and the whole extent of their subtlety and ingenuity is employed to effect those purposes. —Scott.

WISDOM WITH APPARENT INSIGNIFICANCE.—Ver. 24—28. 1. The ants; minute animals, and very weak, and yet they are very industrious in gathering proper food, and have a strange sagacity to do it in the summer, the proper time; this is so great a piece of wisdom, that we may learn of them to be wise for futurity, chap. vi. 6. When the ravening "lions lack, and suffer hunger," the laborious ants have plenty, and know no want. 2. The conies, or, as some rather understand it, the Arabian mice, field mice, weak creatures, and very timorous, yet they have so much wisdom as to "make their houses in the rocks," where they are well guarded, and their feebleness makes them take shelter in those natural fastnesses and fortifications. Sense of our own indigence and weakness should drive us to him that is a "Rock higher than we," for shelter and support; there let us make our habitation. 3. The locusts; they are little also, and "have no king," as the bees have, but "they go forth all of them by bands," like an army in battle array; and, observing such good order among themselves, it is not any inconvenience to them that they "have no king." They are called God's "great army," Joel ii. 25; for, when he pleases, he musters, he marshals them, and wages war by them, as he did upon Egypt. "They go forth all of them gathered together;" so the margin; sense of weakness should engage us to keep together, that we may strengthen the hands of one another. 4. The spider; an insect, but as great an instance of industry in our houses as the ants are in the field. Spiders are very ingenious in weaving their webs, with a fineness and exactness such as no art can pretend to come near; they "take hold with their hands," and spin a fine thread out of their own bowels with a great deal of art: and they are not only in poor men's cottages, but in "king's palaces," notwithstanding all the care that is there taken to destroy them. Providence wonderfully keeps up those kinds of creatures, not only which men provide not for, but which every man's hand is against, and seeks the destruction of.—Henry

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—17. Wicked men are often hypocrites in courage, and conceal an aching trembling heart under the affectation of great composure. But if, at sometimes, they are ready to tremble at the shaking of a leaf, and "to flee when no man pursueth," how will their hands be strong, or their hearts endure, when the almighty Judge shall pursue them with his dreadful vengeance? This terror will be unspeakably more insupportable, than the dread of them has been to their inferiors and vassals. And yet some of them, who have risen to authority, have been more cruel and terrible than the most savage beasts; and to their own subjects especially, as if ambitious to let all the world know that they wanted understanding, as much as equity! Many of them have been inhuman oppressors and sanguinary persecutors, who have cut off by cruel deaths numbers of their people, and driven the wisest and best of them into

THE words of king Lemuel, [a] the prophecy that [b] his mother taught him.

2 What, my son? and what, [c] the son of my womb? and what, [d] the son of my vows?

3 Give not [e] thy strength unto women, nor thy ways [f] to that which destroyeth kings.

4 It is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine; nor for princes strong drink:

5 Lest they drink, and forget the law, and *pervert the judgment of [†] any of the afflicted.

6 ¶ Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish,[1] and wine unto those that be [‡] of heavy hearts.

7 Let him [i] drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more.

8 Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all [§] such as are appointed to destruction.

9 Open thy mouth, [l] judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and needy.

10 ¶ Who [m] can find a virtuous woman? for [n] her price is far above rubies.

11 The [o] heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil.

12 She [p] will do him good and not evil all the days of her life.

13 She seeketh wool, and flax, and [q] worketh willingly [s] with her hands.

14 She [r] is like the merchants' ships; [t] she bringeth her food from afar.

15 She riseth also while it is yet night, [t] and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens.

16 She [u] considereth a field, and [l] buyeth it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

17 She girdeth her loins with strength, and [v] strengtheneth her arms.

18 She *perceiveth that her merchandise is good: [z] her candle goeth not out by night.[5]

19 She [a] layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

20 [b] She [†] stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

21 She is not [d] afraid of the snow for her household: for all her household are clothed with [‡] scarlet.

22 She maketh herself [e] coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

23 Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

24 She maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles [6] unto the merchant.

25 Strength and honour are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

26 She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

27 She [o] looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

28 Her [p] children arise up, and call her blessed; [q] her husband also, and he praiseth her.

29 Many daughters have [§] done virtuously, but [r] thou excellest them all.

30 [s] Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but [t] a woman that feareth the LORD, [u] she shall be praised.

31 Give her [x] of the fruit of her hands; [y] and let her own works praise her in the gates.

CHAP. XXXI.—LEMUEL. Ver. 1. Most interpreters are of opinion that Lemuel is Solomon; the name signifies one that is for God, or devoted to God; and so it agrees well enough with that honourable name which, by divine appointment, was given to Solomon, 2 Sam. xii. 25, "Jedidiah, beloved of the Lord." Lemuel is supposed to be a pretty, fond, endearing name, by which his mother used to call him; and so much did he value himself upon the interest he had in his mother's affections, that he was not ashamed to call himself by it. One would rather incline to think it is Solomon that here tells us what "his mother taught him," because he tells us, chap. iv. 4, what his father taught him. But some think, (and the conjecture is not improbable,) that Lemuel was a prince of some neighbouring country, whose mother was a daughter of Israel, perhaps of the house of David, and taught him these good lessons. Note 1. It is the duty of mothers, as well as fathers, to teach their children what is good, that they may do it, and what is evil, that they may avoid it; when they are young and tender, they are most under the mother's eye, and she has then an opportunity of moulding and fashioning their minds well, which she ought not to let slip. 2. Even kings must be catechised; the greatest of men is less than the least of the ordinances of God. 3. Those that are grown up to maturity should often call to mind, and make mention of, the good instructions they received when they were children, for their own admonition, the edification of others, and the honour of those who were the guides of their youth.—Henry.

TEMPERANCE.—Ver. 4—7. "It is not for kings, O Lemuel, to drink wine; or for rulers to desire strong drink." Kings and magistrates should be more scrupulously temperate than other men, in proportion to the importance of their offices; for if they cloud their understanding with wine, they will be apt to forget or mistake the statutes by which they should judge, or be induced by designing men to commit injustice. This is the more aggravated, because the poor and afflicted are chiefly injured. Their cause may be deemed worthy of little notice; nay, perhaps decided against them, and even their lives sacrificed to oblige some powerful oppressor, who is the companion of the ruler in his revels. On the contrary, strong drink should be administered as a cordial to those who are ready to faint through weakness, or weariness; and to cheer the spirits of the dejected, that they may be raised above the depressing sense of their poverty and misery.—Some think, that "by him that is ready to perish," the condemned criminals are meant, to whom it was customary to give a draught of wine, or other strong drink, when led to execution.

THE VIRTUOUS WIFE.—Ver. 10—31. As we have repeatedly in this book been warned against the seductions of bad women; there is a peculiar propriety in its concluding with the character and commendations of the virtuous woman; for the confutation of such, as indiscriminately censure the sex, and speak against marriage, though it is God's own institution. In the fallen state of human nature, it is no wonder, that but few, either men or women, are in any good measure what they ought to be; and various causes concur in rendering women what they ought not to be. But it is of vast importance, that a standard should be fixed, by which all, who regard the word of God, may estimate the intrinsic value of the female character. Some there are to be found, who in a good degree answer to this description; yea, many daughters have done virtuously; every one of them is far more valuable than rubies, and happy is he to whom the Lord gives such a prize. Whilst his heart safely trusts in her, she will do him good, in every sense, as long as she liveth; and conduce to his comfort, interest, credit, and safety from snares and temptations. But when we carefully consider this standard of feminine excellency, in which conjugal fidelity, economy, industry, cheerful attention to household affairs, and to the good government of servants and education of children, with a regard to the interests of her husband, are united with charity, piety, wisdom, and the fear of God; in which avarice and extravagance are equally avoided, and the due distance is preserved betwixt penuriousness and waste, betwixt ostentation and slovenly neglect; and in which no mention is made of time spent in those vain amusements and decorations, which seem the only business of multitudes; but the whole life is employed, and the thoughts and conversation occupied about, the duties to be performed to God and man: I say, when this character is well considered, and contrasted with the admired and accomplished females around us; the mind must be impressed with surprise, and led to many interesting inquiries. Numbers in the different ranks of life may be found, any where, except in their own families, or in the house of God: they are adorned with every thing, except wisdom and grace: they affect to know many things, but would not even be thought to understand those which are the proper duties of their station. Nay, they leave even their own offspring to the care of mercenaries, that they may be totally disengaged, and at liberty for vanity and dissipation! But which of the two characters is most amiable, rational, or useful? Which is the best fitted for the important duties of a wife and mother? Indeed, the matter admits not of a question. At first glance we perceive how much ancient simplicity excelled modern refinement: and how far the wisdom of God's word surpasses the devices of men!—Scott.

BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

THE name of this book is taken from the Septuagint, and is a Greek word signifying a preacher, or one who harangues a public congregation. The Hebrew name is Coheleth, which may mean either the person who assembles the people or he who addresses them when assembled. The book is generally ascribed to Solomon; and it can scarcely be doubted that the tradition of the Jews is well grounded—namely, that Solomon wrote it when brought to deep repentance for the atrocious crimes into which he had been seduced by his idolatrous wives and concubines. Certain it is, either that Solomon was the writer, or that some other person wrote it, as assuming his character; for many things in it are so peculiarly appropriate to Solomon, that no other man who ever lived could truly speak them (i. 12, 16; ii. 4-10; vii. 25-28; xii. 9). But it would be very absurd to suppose that any inspired writer would use a feigned name and character. "The tendency of this book is excellent, when rightly understood; and Solomon speaks in it with great clearness of the revealed truths of a future state, and universal judgment."—GREY. It is evidently an inquiry after the chief good, or what can make man happy—an inquiry which the most learned, sagacious, and ingenious pagan philosophers often made, but never could solve; but which the inspired preacher hath satisfactorily and finally settled, not merely by authority or argument, but by the result of his own experiments. A more unexceptionable decision cannot be conceived, whether Solomon's greatness and prosperity, his wisdom and knowledge, or his advantages for making these experiments, and his assiduity in them, be considered. He had evidently two objects in view—first, to shew where happiness could not be found; and, secondly, where it might. "Whatsoever is vain and perishing cannot make men happy: But all men's designs in this world are vain and perishing; therefore they cannot by prosecuting such designs make themselves happy." "That which can make a man's mind quiet, still, and calm, both in life and death—that alone can make him happy: Now, this the fear of the Lord can do for him, and this alone; therefore, this and nothing else can make him a happy man."—PATRICK. The first six chapters are principally employed on the former part of the argument: in which is shewn the vanity of knowledge and wisdom (apart from true religion), of mirth and pleasure, of magnificence, prosperity, power, and wealth; yet, some counsels are here interspersed, tending to shew how the vanity, at least the vexation, of each may be abated; and also intimations afforded, that wisdom is far preferable to all other acquisitions, and that a cheerful use of providential blessings is much better than covetousness. In the second part, from the end of the sixth chapter, the general object of the writer is gradually unfolded; and many important cautions and instructions are given, how to make the best of things as we find them, how to live comfortably and usefully in this evil world, and how to derive benefit from the changing events of life. Here, indeed, the royal preacher sometimes pauses, to shew the vanity of the several things of which he has occasion to discourse; yet this part is chiefly employed in teaching us where and how to seek present comfort and final happiness. In respect of outward things, the sacred writer inculcates a cheerful, liberal, and charitable use of them, without expecting to derive from them any permanent or satisfactory delight. Yet he counsels us to take the transient pleasure which agreeable circumstances can afford, as far as consists with the fear of God, or true religion; to be patient under unavoidable evils; not to aim at perilous, arduous, or impracticable changes; to fill up the station allotted us, in a peaceable, equitable, and prudent manner; to be contented, meek, and affectionate; to do good abundantly, and to persevere in so doing for the pleasure arising from it, and in expectation of a gracious recompence. These general rules are interspersed with warnings and counsels to princes and great men; and to subjects in respect of their rulers. Nor can it be doubted that a great part of the vexation of human life is occasioned by the misconduct of men in these particulars. But the conclusion of the whole matter is this: "Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole of man:" and thus habitually prepare for death and judgment, which will surely and speedily arrive. In fact, it is evident that Solomon shews the vanity and vexation of all those things from which idolatrous and apostate men seek happiness, in order to recommend the substantial blessings of true religion; and that, however some parts of his doctrine militate against the traditions of men or the impositions of Antichrist, none of them, when fairly interpreted, and compared with the context, will be found inconsistent with the doctrines and precepts of Christ and his apostles.

CHAP. I.

The preacher sheweth that all human courses are vain, 1; because the creatures are restless in their courses, 4, they bring forth nothing new, and old things are forgotten, 9, and because he hath found it so in the studies of wisdom, 12.

THE words of [a]the Preacher,[1] the son of David, king of Jerusalem.

2 Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, [c]vanity of vanities; all is vanity.

3 What profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun?

4 ¶ One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth for ever.

5 The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, [t]and [*]hasteth to his place where he arose.

6 The [k]wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north: it whirleth about continually; and the wind returneth again according to his circuits.[2]

7 All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they [†]return again.

8 All things are [m]full of labour; [n]man cannot utter it: [o]the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.

9 ¶ The thing [p]that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done, is that which shall be done: [q]and there is no new thing[3] under the sun.

15 That which is [z]crooked cannot be made straight; and that which is [§]wanting cannot be numbered.

16 I communed with mine own heart, saying, [b]Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem; yea, my heart had [‖]great experience of wisdom and knowledge.

17 And I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly:[6] [d]I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit.

18 For [e]in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.

CHAP. I. ECCLESIASTES.—Ver. 1. The word rendered preacher, has a feminine termination, though it is used both with a masculine and feminine verb; but the connection, in several places, confines the meaning of it to the speaker, and not the discourse. In its general meaning, it signifies one who gathereth; that is, one that collects the people together into a congregation, in order to instruct them.—As Solomon, in the preceding book, spake in the name of Wisdom, (which is feminine in the original,) it seems most obvious to consider him as speaking in the same or a similar character, if the feminine termination of the original word be at all regarded. The name of Solomon indeed is not mentioned in the book, but no other son of David reigned in Jerusalem over Israel, ver. 12; Solomon's successors were called kings of Judah, as distinguished from the kings of Israel, or of the revolted tribes; and many things in the book can suit none but Solomon.—"These are the words of him who thought the name of a preacher, or public instructor of God's people, no less honourable than that of the son of king David, whom he succeeded in his throne." [Bp. Patrick.]—"Solomon is here called a preacher, or one that assembleth the people, because of his teaching the true knowledge of God, and how men ought to pass their life in this transitory world."—Scott.

UNIVERSAL VANITY.—Ver. 2. This idea is expressed here very emphatically; not only "All is vain," but in the abstract, "All is vanity;" as if vanity were the proprium quarto modo—property in the fourth mode, of the things of this world, that which enters into the nature of them. They are not only "vanity," but "vanity of vanities," the vainest vanity, vanity in the highest degree, nothing but vanity, such a vanity as is the cause of a great deal of vanity. And this is redoubled, because the thing is certain and past dispute, it is "vanity of vanities." This intimates that the wise man had his own heart fully convinced of, and much affected with, this truth, and that he was very desirous that others should be convinced of it, and affected with it, as he was, but that he found the generality of men very loth to believe it, and consider it, Job xxxiii. 14; it intimates, likewise, that we cannot comprehend and express the vanity of this world. But who is it that speaks thus slightly of the world? Is it one that will stand to what he says? Yes, he puts his name to it, "saith the preacher." Is it one that was a competent judge? Yes, as much as ever any man was. Many speak contemptuously of the world, because they are hermits, and know it not, or beggars, and have it not; but Solomon knew it, he had dived into nature's depths, 1 Kings iv. 33, and he had it, more of it perhaps than ever any man had, his head filled with its notions, and "his belly" with its "hid treasures," Ps. xvii. 14, and he passes this judgment on it. But did he speak as one [illegible] authority? Yes, not only that of a king, but that of a prophet, a preacher; he [illegible] yet was divinely inspired to say it. But did he not say it in his haste, or in a passion, upon occasion of some particular disappointment? No, he said it deliberately, said it, and proved it, laid it down as a fundamental principle, on which he grounded the necessity of being religious. And, as some think, one main thing he designed, was, to show that the everlasting throne and kingdom which God had by Nathan promised to David and his seed, must be of another world; for all things in this world are subject to vanity, and therefore have not in them sufficient to answer the extent of that promise. If Solomon find all to be vanity, then the kingdom of the Messiah must come, in which we shall inherit substance.—Henry.

SOLOMON'S EXPERIMENT.—Ver. 12—18. After this exordium, the preacher proceeds to a more particular account of himself and his subjects. Being king over Israel in Jerusalem, he desired wisdom and knowledge, in order to a proper discharge of his high and important trust: and he applied himself heartily, and with all the powers of his capacious understanding, to learn every thing that had been done under heaven, as far as it was discoverable by him. For God hath so ordered it, that even knowledge must be acquired with sore labour and travail by the sons of men; which, however, tends to exercise and employ their minds in a salutary manner, and serves to humble them, as some render the words. Or the clause may mean that Solomon searched out the nature and causes of that sore labour and travail with which God exercises the children of men. The result of this inquiry, however, was, that when he had considered all the works done under the sun, he found them not only to be vanity, but vexation of spirit: anxious cares and insipid pleasures ending in bitter disappointments. For no human power, sagacity, or industry, can rectify the crookedness of men's dispositions and behaviour; or cure worldly enjoyments of their vanity; or supply, or even number up, those things which are wanting to felicity. These subjects Solomon pondered in his own mind with serious attention, and considering that he had both riches, authority, capacity, and leisure, he was determined to examine critically the different pursuits from which men expected happiness. And in the first place he purposed to examine the difference between the enjoyments of such as sought knowledge, and studied the rules of prudence and natural wisdom, and the pleasures of those who lived at their ease, and minded nothing but sensual mirth and indulgence; which was generally deemed to be madness and folly, and yet had many advocates. But he found the very investigation of the subject to be vexatious; and he was convinced that there was no solid satisfaction on either side. For even the pursuit of knowledge and wisdom only made distressing discoveries to him of man's wickedness and misery; so that the more he knew, the more he saw cause to lament and mourn; and, at the same time, the increase of knowledge rendered the mind more [illegible] title of painful feelings, and aggravated the guilt of [illegible]

CHAP. II.

The vanity of human courses in the works of pleasure, 1. Though the wise be better than the fool, yet both have one event, 12. The vanity of human labour in leaving it they know not to whom, 18.

I [a]SAID in mine heart, Go to now, [c]I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity.

2 I said of laughter, [d]It is mad:[1] and of mirth, What doeth it?

3 I []sought in mine heart to []give myself unto wine, yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom; [e]and to lay hold on folly, [h]till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven [†]all the days of their life.

4 I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards:

5 I made [m]me gardens and orchards, and [n]I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits;

6 I made me pools of water, [p]to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

7 I got me [q]servants and maidens, [r]and had [‡]servants born in my house; [s]also I had great possessions of great and small cattle, above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

8 I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces:[2] I gat me [u]men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as [§]musical instruments, and that of all sorts.

9 So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them; I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour: and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then [a]I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and, [b]behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.

12 ¶ And [c]I turned myself to behold wisdom, and madness, and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? [‖]even that which hath been already done.

13 Then [d]I saw [*]that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as [e]light excelleth darkness.[3]

14 The wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also that [g]one event happeneth to them all.

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth [†]even to me; [h]and why was I then more wise? [‖]Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.

16 For [k]there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is, in the days to come shall all be forgotten. And how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefore I hated life;[4] because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, [p]I hated all my labour which I had [‡]taken under the sun: because [q]I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have shewed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about [t]to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.[5]

21 For there is a man [u]whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he [§]leave it for his portion. This also is vanity and a great evil.

22 For what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun?

23 For all his days are sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

24 ¶ There is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he should [‖]make his soul enjoy good in his labour. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.

25 For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For God giveth to a man that is good [*]in his sight, wisdom, and knowledge, and joy: but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather and to heap up, that he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

CHAP. III.

By the necessary change of times, vanity is increased, 1. God's works are excellent, 11. From the abuse of human judicatures, God's judgment is inferred, 16.

TO [a]every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose [b]under the heaven:

2 A [c]time to [*]be born, [d]and a time to die; [e]a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted;

3 A [f]time to kill,[1] and [g]a time to heal; [h]a time to break down, and a time to build up;

4 A [‖]time to weep, and [k]a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time [‖]to dance;

5 A time [m]to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and a time to [†]refrain from embracing;

CHAP. II. REFLECTIONS ON SOLOMON'S PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS.—Ver. 1—26. The manifold devices of men, in order to derive satisfaction from the world, and their incessant changing from one thing to another, resemble the restlessness of one in a fever, who supposes his uneasiness to arise from his situation, though, in fact, it is the effect of his disease. If we could make full trial of every thing under the sun, and should determine to prove our hearts with mirth, and bid them enjoy pleasure in all its seducing forms, we should soon be constrained to say, "Behold, this also is vanity!" The devotees of a gay and social life are themselves sensible of its emptiness. They cannot but feel that immoderate laughter is a kind of madness, and "as to mirth, what doeth it?" they know that frequently in the midst of their tumultuous joys, their hearts are uneasy; and that their laughter is commonly succeeded by proportionable languor and dejection, and ends in disappointment; and often occasions them painful reflections in their short intervals of solitude. And if men have wealth, taste, and inclination, and can make trial of more expensive pursuits, (without injuring their circumstances, as many do,) they will find them also vanity and vexation. When the lower order in society behold the rich and noble making great works, building magnificent houses, laying out gardens, parks, and plantations, forming canals and fishponds, and whatever can be devised for luxury or embellishment; when they see them surrounded with a number of servants, possessed of large estates, and abundance of gold and silver, and collecting from every province its peculiar treasure, even all that is most curious, beautiful, and valuable, of statues, pictures, furniture, jewels, and whatever the eye can lust after, with musical instruments, (those delights of the sons of men,) to sooth the ear, and charm the mind; and when they see all this confluence of earthly good in the possession of one who neither runs into ruinous excess, nor yet withholds his heart from any joy, and who, amidst all, retains a reputation for wisdom, and manages his concerns with discretion; I say, when the poor witness such scenes, they can scarcely help mistaking this glare of prosperity for solid happiness; and they will be apt to covet, envy, and complain. But could they feel exactly as the possessor does, probably their envy might be turned into compassion. Thus, when strangers take a transient survey of such scenes of magnificence, where every object excites admiration, they are apt to associate the idea of happiness with that of the possessor; when, perhaps, he is filled with vexation and disappointment, and receives not, during a course of years, half that pleasure from his magnificence that they enjoy in one hour. Indeed, whilst the plans are forming, or the idea of increasing and supereminent greatness and renown float before the mind; and whilst improvements are making, and something new every day excites the attention, there is a degree of joy in a man's labour and success, and this he has for his fading portion. But when his designs are finished, and he vainly hopes to be repaid for all his trouble, care, and expense, he "looks on all that his hands have wrought, and behold all is vanity and vexation of spirit; so that there is no profit under the sun." And if the richest, wisest, and most prosperous of kings, could find nothing but vanity and vexation in all his possessions and enjoyments, what can any man do that cometh after him, and determines to repeat the same experiment? We must not, indeed, place mad mirth, intemperance, and folly, upon a level with the liberal arts, useful learning, or economical or political wisdom. The former are evil in themselves, the others are good, except when misplaced, idolized, and abused. So that even this "wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness." Perhaps even Solomon, with all his glory, would have long since been forgotten, or his history distorted by fable, if he had not been made partaker of divine wisdom, and placed as king over God's people, and honoured as a writer of the sacred Scriptures. And what is this bubble, which so many covet, and so few obtain? What good can commendations on earth do the body in the grave, or the soul in hell? And can the spirits of just men made perfect at all need them? It would, indeed, be as well if there were in no case any remembrance of the wise man, more than of the fool, except as survivors are the better for his wisdom. So that, if this were all, we might be tempted to hate our life, with all the fruitless toil and work that is done under the sun; as "it is all vanity and vexation of spirit." One main pretence of worldly men, in excuse for their eager pursuit of vanity, is, that they are providing for their children: but this can afford a reflecting man no solid satisfaction; nay, indeed, it must generally add to the vanity and vexation derived from other sources. For the uncertainty which there must be, what use they will make of their riches, and whether they will behave wisely or foolishly, when they come to have much in their power; and the fears lest it should do them harm and not good, and to multitudes by their means; may make a worldly man hate all his labour under the sun. Soon it must all pass into other hands. To eat and drink to the moderate satisfaction of our appetites, is so far good; and there is nothing better for man of earthly enjoyment; these, the animals share to greater advantage, but the rational soul requires some better portion.—Scott.

CHAP. III. A SUPERINTENDING PROVIDENCE.—Ver. 1—9. There is a season and a time for every one of God's purposes to take place in this lower world; and for us to perform the several parts of our duty, and prepare for the future: and we cannot anticipate or retard those appointed seasons, by any of our contrivances or labours. Thus, there was a time, in the purposes of God, for our birth; and there is another for our death; known to him, but unknown to us. There are times in which nations and fami-

8 A [c]time to love, and [x]a time to hate; [y]a time of war, and a time of peace.

9 What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

10 I have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.

11 ¶ He hath made every thing beautiful in his time: also he hath set the world in their heart,[3] [d]so that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

12 ¶ I know that there is no good in them, [e]but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

13 And also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

14 I know that [g]whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: [h]nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

15 That [k]which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is [$]past.

16 ¶ And moreover I saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

17 I [m]said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: [o]for there is a time there for every purpose and for every work.

18 ¶ I said in mine heart [p]concerning the estate of the sons of men, [!]that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts.

19 For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast: for all is vanity.

20 All [u]go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.

21 ¶ Who knoweth the spirit *of man[4] that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?

2 Wherefore [e]I praised the dead[1] which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive.

3 Yea, [f]better is he than both they which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.

4 ¶ Again, I considered all travail, and [†]every right work, that for this a man is envied of his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

5 ¶ The fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh.

6 ¶ Better is [l]an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

11 Again, [z]if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; [a]and a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

13 ¶ Better is a poor and a wise child, than an old and foolish king, who [‡]will no more be admonished.

14 For out of prison he cometh to reign;[3] whereas [d]also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor.

Vanities in divine service, 1; in murmuring against oppression, 8; and in riches, 9. Joy in riches is the gift of God, 18.

KEEP thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to lies are planted and take root: and then there are means to be used, duties to be performed, and comforts to be shared: but there are also times, in which God plucks up that which was planted, and no human wisdom can prevent it; and then we are called to the submission, and to the duties, of an afflicted state. In like manner he cuts off our dear friends or relatives, or heals us, or them, in his own time; he breaks down our established prosperity, or builds it up like a city recovered from its ashes; he calls us to weep and mourn, or to rejoice and dance for gladness; to raise trophies of victory, or to scatter the monuments of success under severe calamities, in his own time and manner. He also causes friends and relatives to meet in comfort, and with mutual endearments: at other times, they are either separated, or sorrow makes it seasonable for them to refrain from embracing, or circumstances call them to other duties. There are also times, when men get wealth with ease, and keep it without difficulty: at other times, no prudence can preserve them from the most ruinous losses; nay, they will be glad to cast away all their wealth, to save their lives. At some times men are called to rend their clothes in sorrow; at others, to prepare the garments worn on joyful occasions: at some seasons awful afflictions stop their mouths; at others, unexpected deliverances open them to speak the praises of God, and to express the gladness of their hearts. At one time they meet with kindness which excites their love; at another, with injuries which tempt them to resentment and hatred. So that nations experience times when they must wage war, as well as opportunities for the renewal of peace; nor can individuals at all seasons shun dispute and contention. To expect stable happiness in such an unstable world, must ensure disappointment.

A FUTURE STATE.—Ver. 18—21. Some think that these verses contain the objections of some infidels to Solomon's doctrine of the righteous judgment of God. But the construction requisite to make out this meaning, appears to me perplexed. Solomon seems to have expressed the wish of his heart, concerning the estate of the sons of men, especially that of powerful oppressors, that God would manifest it unto them, and cause them duly to consider it; that they might perceive, that by choosing this world as their portion, they reduce themselves to a level with the beasts, without being, like them, exempted from present vexation and a future account. For that, which befalleth the sons of men, "respecting mere animal pleasures or pains," befalleth also beasts. Both live, and breathe, and die alike, and go to the same place, and return to the dust whence they were taken. So that, in these things, man hath no pre-eminence above the beast; for all is vanity. As none can fully comprehend, so, few consider properly, the difference between the rational soul of man, which after the death of the body, returns to God, and enters upon an eternal state of happiness or misery; and the spirit, or life, of the beast which is extinct with the body when it returns to the earth. And for want of attending to this, men forfeit their real and vast pre-eminence, and expose themselves to final and eternal misery.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. FRIENDSHIP—"TWO BETTER THAN ONE."—Ver. 9—12. "Wo to him that is alone:" he lies exposed to many temptations which good company and friendship would prevent and help him to guard against; he wants that advantage which a man has by the countenance of his friend, as iron has of being sharpened by iron. A monastic life then was surely never intended for a state of perfection, nor should those be reckoned the greatest lovers of God who cannot find in their hearts to love any one else. Solomon proves by divers instances the benefit of friendship and good conversation. 1. Occasional succour in an exigence. It is good for two to travel together, "for if" one happen to "fall," and perhaps so as not to be able to get up himself, the other will be ready "to help him up;" a friend in need is a friend indeed; whereas if one travel alone, and get a fall, he may be lost for want of a little help. If a man fall "into sin," his friend will help to "restore him with the spirit of meekness;" if he fall into trouble, his friend will help to comfort him and assuage his grief. 2. Mutual warmth. As a fellow-traveller is of use, (amicus pro vehiculo—a friend is a good substitute for a carriage,) so is a bedfellow; "If two lie together, they have heat." So virtuous and gracious affections are excited by good society, and Christians warm one another by "provoking one another to love and to good works." 3. United strength. If an enemy find a man alone, he is likely to "prevail against him;" with his own single strength he cannot make his part good, but, if he have a second, he may do well enough, "two shall withstand him;" "You shall help me against my enemy, and I will help you against yours;" according to the agreement between Joab and Abishai, 2 Sam. x. 11, and so both are conquerors, whereas, acting separately, both had been conquered; as was said of the ancient Britons, when the Romans invaded them, Dum singuli pugnant universi vincuntur—While they fight in detached parties, they sacrifice the general cause. In our spiritual warfare we may be helpful to one another as well as in our spiritual work; next to the comfort of communion with God, is that of the communion of saints. He concludes with this proverb, "A threefold cord is not easily broken," any more than a bundle of arrows, though each single thread and each single arrow is. Two together he compares to "a threefold cord;" for where two are closely joined in holy love and fellowship, Christ will by his Spirit come to them, and make the third, as he joined himself to the two disciples going to Emmaus, and then there is "a threefold cord" that can never be "broken." "They that dwell in love dwell in God, and God in them."—Henry.

hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools:[1] for they consider not that they do evil.

2 Be [d]not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any *thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth:[2] therefore let thy words be few.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.

4 When thou [h]vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; [i]for he hath no pleasure in fools: [k]pay that which thou hast vowed.

5 Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

6 Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; neither say thou before the angel, that [o]it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?

7 For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but fear thou God.

8 ¶ If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the [†]matter: [u]for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be [y]higher than they.

9 ¶ Moreover [z]the profit of the earth is for all: [a]the king himself is served by the field.

10 He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity.

11 When goods increase, [d]they are increased that eat them: and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

12 The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

13 There is [g]a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

14 But [i]those riches perish by evil travail: [k]and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

15 As he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

16 And this also is [m]a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and what profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind?

17 All his days also [p]he eateth in darkness,[3] and he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.

18 ¶ Behold that which I have seen: it [‡]is good and comely for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun all [§]the days of his life, which God giveth him: for it is his portion.

19 Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labour; this is the gift of God.

20 [‖]For he shall not much remember the days of his life; because God answereth him in the joy of his heart.

THERE is [a]an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men:

2 A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, [c]so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth; yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 ¶ If a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, [b]and also that he have no burial; I say, that an untimely birth is better than he.

4 For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and [k]his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: [l]this hath more rest than the other.[l]

6 Yea, though he live a thousand years twice told, [n]yet hath he seen no good: [o]do not all go to one place?

7 ¶ All the labour of man is for his mouth,[2] and yet the *appetite is not filled.

8 For [q]what hath the wise more than the fool? what hath [r]the poor, that knoweth to walk before the living?

9 [s]Better is the sight of the eyes than the [†]wandering of the desire:[3] [t]this is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 ¶ That [u]which hath been is named already, [x]and it is known that it is man: [y]neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he.

11 Seeing there be many things that increase vanity, what is man the better?

12 For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, all [‡]the days of his vain life which he spendeth as a shadow? [c]for who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

CHAP. V. Sacrifice of Fools.—Ver. 1—3. Solomon meant by his whole argument, to show, that every thing was vanity except true religion: but here he cautions his readers against those mistakes, which render even religious duties vain and worthless.—Every one indeed ought to attend the house and ordinances of God: but it should be done with holy awe and reverence, shown by the customary external expressions: as Moses was commanded to uncover his "feet," when on holy ground. The first care of all, who would acceptably worship God, should be to "hear" and learn how he should be worshipped; that they may not, in a precipitate manner, affront him with a hypocritical or superstitious service, or with sacrifices, oblations, or ceremonies, without a corresponding frame of mind. These are "the sacrifices of fools;" who, through ignorance and carelessness, do evil and are not aware of it, but suppose they recommend themselves to God, when in fact they greatly provoke him. Men should therefore avoid rashness in their professions, petitions, or vows; they should not hastily speak before God every thing which occurs to their thoughts.—They should remember his greatness and purity who dwelleth in heaven, that high and holy place, and their own indigence and sinfulness: They ought to avoid needless loquacity and vain repetitions; and express themselves in plain language and with perspicuous brevity, such as springs from the heart, and not such as is affected and studied. All kinds of copious prayers cannot be condemned, but only those that are unmeaning; such as the vain repetitions of the heathen, who expected to be heard for their much speaking; 1 Kings xviii. 26—29; the pater-nosters, and other forms used by the Papists, and the long prayers of the Pharisees.

Reflections on the Toil of the World.—Ver. 8—20. The more men covet wealth, the greater anxiety must they feel, when they consider its uncertainty. The riches that have been gathered and hoarded by the toil and penury of many years, are often swept away by some unforeseen calamity; or a covetous man, by grasping at some still larger advantage, loses all in some ruinous project; nay, whilst his riches perish by some evil travail, he often loses his life in attempting to preserve them, or breaks his heart for very vexation at his disappointment; or his children spend all, and become as poor as if he had neither laboured nor saved. And whether the rich man do, or do not survive his wealth, a coffin, a shroud and a grave, all given him at the option of the survivors, will shortly be his whole inventory; and in other respects as he came, so shall he go, except that he must give an account for all his conduct at the tribunal of God. What a sore evil then is this, for a rational creature to spend his life in incessant toil, care, and uneasiness; and to live in dejection and fretfulness all his life; and then to end his days in sorrow and wrath, as well as with sickness and dying pains!—Scott.

CHAP. VI.—Reflections on Life and its Cares.—Ver. 1—12. There are not only many and sore evils and miseries under the sun, but they are common among men, as every careful observer of mankind must know. For it is seen often that Providence confers on a man a confluence of earthly possessions, so that he wanteth nothing for outward enjoyment, and hath no desire after more substantial good; and yet the Lord leaves him so to his avarice, or his malignant dispositions, that he has no heart to make a comfortable use of them, and, by one means or other, they all come into the hands of strangers; and this is vanity, and a sore disease. Nay, put the case that any one have a numerous family, and a good constitution, and live in health and affluence to old age; yet, if his soul be not enriched with wisdom and grace, and so he lives unbeloved, and dies unlamented and despised, it were wiser to envy the felicity of a still-born child, than that of such a person, who hath only staid on earth to contract guilt, and experience vexation. Sooner or later, the rich and the poor, the wise and the foolish, must be laid in the grave; and it is of small consequence whether this be in infancy, or after double the years of the oldest man who ever lived; seeing the cares so much overbalance the pleasures of life, except as we live to prepare for heaven, to glorify God, and to do good. For, setting these things aside, how vain are all man's labours, how empty are all his enjoyments! A round of trifling pursuits and unsatisfying gratifications, the pleasure of which is more than counterbalanced by the uneasy cravings of the appetite, which are continually returning! And what in this view can the wise do toward acquiring happiness, above the fool? or the rich, above the poor and industrious? Nay, the poorest man, who knows how to walk before the living God, is far happier here than the most prosperous ungodly man. Yet the pleasure of present enjoyments is far better than the empty reveries of visionary good, on which many feed, as upon the wind, and start out of these waking dreams, and find themselves empty, or rather filled with vexation at their disappointment, and tortured with the gnawing of their exhorbitant and roving desires. But, indeed, every endeavour of sinful mortal man to find rest and happiness in earthly things, is a vain struggle against the sentence passed upon him for his rebellion, or, rather, against the effects of his apostacy. And it is equally vain, and still more impious, to cavil at the justice of the sentence, and to contend with Him that is mightier than he. But in returning unto God, trusting in his mercy, through Jesus Christ, submitting to his will, and preparing for death by a conscientious obedience to his commands, we may find rest to our souls, and enjoy sweet earnests of heavenly consolations; and soon shall we glide through this vexatious world, and find ourselves in that happy place, where "is fulness of joy, and pleasures at God's right hand for evermore."—Scott.

11 ¶ Wisdom is [§]good with an inheritance: and by it there is profit to [y]them that see the sun.

12 For wisdom is [‡]a defence, and money is a defence: but the excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom giveth life to them that have it.

13 [b]Consider the work of God: for [c]who can make that straight, which he hath made crooked?

14 In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath *set the one over against the other, [f]to the end that man should find nothing after him.

15 All things have I seen in the days of my vanity: [h]there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and [i]there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.

16 Be [k]not righteous[2] over much; [l]neither make thyself over wise: why shouldest thou [†]destroy thyself?

17 Be [m]not over much wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldest thou die [‡]before thy time?

18 It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand: [p]for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.[3]

19 Wisdom [q]strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city.

20 For there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not.

21 Also [§]take no heed unto all words that are spoken; lest thou hear thy servant curse thee:

CHAP. VII. House of Mourning.—Ver. 2. "It is better to go to the house of mourning," and there "weep with them that weep, than to go to the house of feasting," to a wedding, or a wake, there to "rejoice with them that do rejoice." It will do us more good, and make better impressions upon us. We may lawfully go to both, as there is occasion; our Saviour both feasted at the wedding of his friend in Cana, and wept at the grave of his friend in Bethany; and we may possibly both glorify God, and do good, and get good, in the house of feasting; but, considering how we are apt to be vain and frothy, proud and secure, and indulgent of the flesh, "it is better" for us to go "to the house of mourning," not to see the pomp of the funeral, but to share in the sorrow of it, and to learn good lessons, both from the dead, who is going thence to his long home, and from the mourners who go about the streets.—Henry.

Extremes.—Ver. 16, 17. There are many parts or appearances of religion, which may be carried to a pernicious extreme. A man may be over-tenacious of insignificant forms, or human inventions: he may pretend to kinds and degrees of righteousness, which the Scriptures do not require, laying much stress on celibacy, fastings, and austerities of various kinds; his boldness and zeal may verge towards rashness and rage; his conscientiousness may degenerate into superstition and scrupulousness; his benevolence into indiscretion; and his candour and good nature into folly; and in affecting to be acquainted with the whole of divine truth, he may become presumptuously curious, and intrude into unrevealed things. Thus many run into extremes, and expose themselves to needless persecution, or to the anger of God. "Be not too rigorous in exacting the extremity of justice upon every occasion: neither do thou affect too much semblance and ostentation of more justice than thou hast. Neither do thou arrogate more wisdom to thyself than is in thee." [Bp. Hall.]—Some expound the verses of the public administration of justice, which should neither be too severe nor too lenient; but though these extremes may be included among others, yet there is no reason to think they were specially intended.—That the affectation or ostentation of extraordinary righteousness, or an over-doing in some outward observances, while more essential matters were proportionably neglected, was intended; and not simple, humble purity and zeal, seems evident from the caution to the reader not to make himself over-wise; that is, "Be not wise in thine own conceit;" or do not intrude into secret things which belong to God. Here affectation or excess, in some particulars, must be meant; and so doubtless in the other clause.—It is, however, certain that we cannot love and serve God too much, or be over-righteous in any thing for which we can produce the warrant of his word: and the other extreme of presumptuous and over-much wickedness, is vastly more common and ruinous.—Scott.

Man's Apostacy.—Ver. 29. Man, as he came out of God's hands, was (as we may say) a little picture of his Maker, who is "good and upright." But he was marred, and, in effect, unmade, by his own folly and badness; "They have sought out many inventions;" they, our first parents, or the whole race, all in general, and every one in particular. "They have sought out great inventions," so some; inventions to become great as gods, Gen. iii. 5. Or, "the inventions of the great ones," so some; of the angels that fell, the Magnates. Or, "many inventions." Man, instead of resting in what God hath found for him, was for seeking to mend himself, like the prodigal that left his father's house, to seek his fortune. Instead of being for one, he was for many; instead of being for God's institutions, he was for his own inventions. The law of his creation would not hold him, but he would be at his own disposal, and follow his own sentiments and inclinations. "Vain man would be wise," wiser than his Maker; is giddy and unsettled in his pursuits, and, therefore, has "many inventions." They that forsake God, wander endlessly. Men's actual transgressions are multiplied. Solomon could not find out how many they are; ver. 28; but he found they were "very many." Many kinds of sins, and those often repeated; "they are more than the hairs on our heads. Ps. xl. 12.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. Certainty of Death.—Ver. 8. When the soul is required, it must be resigned, and it is to no purpose to dispute it, either by arms or arguments, ourselves, or by any friend; "There is no man that has power over" his own "spirit to retain it," when it is summoned to return to God who gave it. It cannot fly any where out of the jurisdiction of death, nor find any place where its writs do not run. It cannot abscond so as to escape death's eye, though it is hid from the eyes of all living. A man has no power to adjourn the day of his death, nor can he by prayers or bribes obtain a reprieve; no bail will be taken, no essoine, protection, or imparlance, allowed. We have not "power over the spirit" of a friend "to retain" that; the prince, with all his authority, cannot prolong the life of the most valuable of his subjects, nor the physician, with his medicines and methods, nor the soldier, with his force, nor the orator, with his eloquence, nor the best saint, with his intercessions. The stroke of death can by no means be put by, when our days are determined, and the hour appointed us is come. Death is an enemy that we must all enter the lists with, sooner or later; "there is no discharge in that war," no dismission from it, either of the men of business, or of the faint-hearted, as there was among the Jews, Deut. xx. 5, 8. While we live, we are struggling with death, and we shall never put off the harness till we put off the body, never obtain the discharge till death has obtained the mastery; the youngest is not released as a fresh-water soldier, nor the oldest as miles emeritus—a soldier whose merits have entitled him to a dis- sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

10 And [y]so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy,[3] and [a]they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

11 ¶ Because [b]sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is [c]fully set in them [4] to do evil.

12 ¶ Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

13 But [e]it shall not be well with the wicked, [h]neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous: I said, that this also is vanity.

15 ¶ Then [m]I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry: for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

16 ¶ When [n]I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth: (for also [o]there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes:)

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, [p]that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun: because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it; yea farther, though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it.

CHAP. IX.

Like things happen on earth to good and bad men, 1. There is a necessity of death unto men, 4. Comfort is all their portion in this life, 7. God's providence ruleth over all, 11. Wisdom is better than strength, 13.

FOR all this I *considered in my heart even to declare all this, that [a]the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God: [b]no man knoweth either love or hatred[1] by all that is before them.

2 All things come [c]alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: [d]as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that [e]feareth an oath.

3 This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all: yea, [f]also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, [g]and madness is in their heart while they live, and [h]after that they go to the dead.

4 ¶ For [i]to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For the living know that they shall die: but [j]the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward;[2] for the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also [n]their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither [o]have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 ¶ Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart: for God now accepteth thy works.

8 Let [s]thy garments be always white;[3] and let thy head lack no ointment.

9 [t]Live joyfully [u]with the wife whom thou lovest [x]all the days of the life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: [y]for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

10 Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; [z]for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

11 ¶ I returned, and saw under the sun, [c]that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; [d]but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 ¶ This [h]wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.[4]

16 Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

17 The words [n]of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 Wisdom is [o]better than weapons of war, but [p]one sinner destroyeth much good.

CHAP. X.

[*] Heb. flies of death.

charge. Death is a battle that must be fought "there is no sending to that war," so some read it; no substituting another to muster for us, no champion admitted to fight for us; we must ourselves engage, and are concerned to provide accordingly as for a battle.—Henry.

ABUSE OF GOD'S PATIENCE.—Ver. 11—13. The denunciations of divine wrath against sinners not being in general executed immediately when the crime is committed, they who perhaps trembled at first when they committed perjury, robbery, murder, or other crimes, finding no harm come upon them, conclude that they shall escape with impunity, and so grow daring in their iniquity. The wickedness of men abuses the long-suffering of God into an occasion of more desperate crimes, and their hearts are wholly bent to commit evil of every kind. Whereas, if God should cut off every criminal by some tremendous judgment as soon as ever he had violated his commandments, men would be afraid to run into such excesses as they now do without fear or shame. But though the ungodly should perpetrate multiplied and aggravated crimes, and their lives should be continued in outward prosperity; yet Solomon assuredly knew that it would be well with those who feared God, and walked before him in his ordinances and commandments, from a reverential awe of his authority, justice, and heart-searching presence; but that it could not be well with the wicked, for they must needs be disquieted by their own passions, and rendered uneasy by remorse and terror; and their most durable prosperity would flee away like a shadow, and expire as a short reprieve; and then just vengeance would come upon them for contempt of God.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. PROVIDENCE NOT THE TEST OF PIETY.—Ver. 1—3. The events of human life are so intricately and mysteriously arranged, that no man can decide concerning himself, or another, whether he be the object of God's special love, or under his wrath, by any outward occurrences. The Lord in his manifold wisdom sometimes afflicts, and sometimes prospers, both the righteous and the wicked, without any exact discrimination; no kind, degree, or continuance of outward affliction can be mentioned, from which a godly man is certainly exempted; or of worldly prosperity, but wicked men have enjoyed it. And yet prosperity is by no means the uniform lot of the wicked, or adversity of the righteous. But matters are so varied and blended together, that all things may be said to come alike to all; and one event to befall the most unjust, selfish, [illegible] and impious; and the most [illegible] pure, and pious, who walk in the [illegible] not honestly and blamelessly [illegible] and the benefit they derive from these varied trials and mercies; and the inward remorse and terror that wicked men experience, and their growing more daring in impiety under all they meet with.—Scott.

IMPROVEMENT OF TIME.—Ver. 10. "Whatsoever thy hand finds to do, do it with thy might." Observe here, 1. There is not only something to be had, but something to be done, in this life, and the chief good we are to inquire after, is "the good we should do," Eccl. ii. 3. This is the world of service, that to come is the world of recompense; this is the world of probation and preparation for eternity; we are here upon business, and upon our behaviour. 2. Opportunity is to direct and quicken duty; that is to be done, which our "hand finds to do," which occasion calls for; and an active hand will always find something to do that will turn to a good account. What must be done, of necessity, our hand will here find a price in it for the doing of, Prov. xvii. 16. 3. What good we have an opportunity of doing, we must do, while we have the opportunity, and "do it with our might," with care, vigour, and resolution, whatever difficulties and discouragements we may meet with in it. Harvest-days are busy days; and we must make hay while the sun shines. Serving God and working out our salvation must be done with "all that is within us;" and all little enough. 4. There is good reason why we should "work the works of him that sent us, while it is day, because the night comes, wherein no man can work," John ix. 4. We must up and be doing now with all possible diligence, because our doing well will be done shortly, and we know not how soon. But this we know, that if the work of life be not done when our time is done, we are undone for ever; "there is no work" to be done, "nor device" to do it, "no knowledge" for speculation, "nor wisdom" for practice, "in the grave whither thou goest." We are all going toward the grave, every day brings us a step nearer it; when we are "in the grave," it will be too late to mend the errors of life, too late to repent, and make our peace with God, too late to lay up any thing in store for eternal life; it must be done now or never.—Henry.

CHAP. X. BAD GOVERNMENT.—Ver. 5—7. Solomon allowed that princes often occasioned many evils by their misconduct and neglect, which could not be vindicated, though they did not justify the disaffected. One abuse especially he had remarked, by which rulers became accessary to the crimes of others, and all the mischiefs which they perpetrated. Namely, when from any selfish motive, or from partiality or caprice, they preferred [illegible] and imprudent men, from low stations to the highest dignities [illegible] imperious, mercenary and rash behaviour; whilst [illegible] knowledge of affairs, entitled them to consideration, qualified them for such eminent places, and rendered them superior to the mean oppressions practised by indigent upstarts, were degraded, and placed under the command of their inferiors; which is, as if slaves rode in state, and princes were required to walk afoot by their sides, to do them honour. Indeed, it naturally gives umbrage, when men of inferior rank, though eminent for abilities, wisdom, and probity, are advanced above the nobles; but much more so, when the talents and dispositions of the favourites are as mean as their extraction.—Scott.

Loquacity.—Ver. 12—15. 1. Fools talk a great deal to no purpose, and they show their folly as much by the multitude, impertinence, and mischievousness, of their words, as by any thing; whereas "the words of a wise man's mouth are gracious," are grace, manifest grace in his heart, and minister grace to the hearers, are good, and such as become him, and do good to all about him; "the lips of a fool" not only expose him to reproach, and make him ridiculous, but "will swallow up himself," and bring him to ruin, by provoking the government to take cognizance of his seditious talk, and call him to an account for it. Adonijah foolishly "spake against his own life," 1 Kings ii. 23. Many a man has been sunk by having "his own tongue fall upon him," Ps. lxiv. 8. See what a fool's talk is. 2. It takes rise from his own weakness and wickedness; "the beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness;" the foolishness bound up in his heart, that is the corrupt spring out of which all these polluted streams flow, the evil treasure out of which evil things are brought. 3. It rises up to fury, and tends to the hurt and injury of others; "the end of his talk," the end it comes to, is madness; he will presently talk himself into an indecent heat, and break out into the wild extravagances of a distracted man. 4. It is all the same over and over, ver. 14, "A fool also is full of words," a passionate fool especially, that runs on endlessly, and never knows when to take up; he will have the last word though it be but the same with that which was the first; what is wanting in the weight and strength of his words, he endeavours in vain to make up in the number of them: and they must be repeated, because otherwise there is nothing in them to make them regarded. Note, Many, who are empty of sense, are "full of words," and the least solid are the most noisy.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. Practical Observations.—Let no Christian be weary of well-doing in every way. This will do more to render life comfortable, than carnal prosperity and pleasure.—The light of the Sun of Righteousness and his healing beams are far more pleasing to the believer's soul, than the light of the sun to his eyes: and though he may expect pain, sickness, and death, yet his Redeemer will not leave him comfortless: his sun may be clouded and eclipsed; but it shall never go down to leave him in darkness and despair. Soon will the longest life of earthly pleasure expire: and how numerous and dreary will be the days, the years, the countless, endless ages of darkness, which await those who die in their sins. Let the careless and the carnal remember this, and prepare for their closing scene. Nor can young persons begin this needful work too soon. Whilst their spirits are lively and their hearts cheerful; let them so temper their joy, as to recollect continually the account they must give of their whole conduct. And let those, (alas, how numerous are they!) who determine to give a loose to every appetite, and rush into every scene of dissipation and vicious pleasure, to which they can have access, take this along with them, "that God registers every one of their sinful thoughts and desires, their idle words, and wicked works; and will at last produce the account of millions of crimes, which they committed with their jovial companions, and speedily forgot." If they would, then hold remorse, terror, and anguish in future years; if they would have hope and comfort on a dying bed; if they would escape temporal and eternal misery; let them so bridle their passions in the fear of God, and in the view of this great season of retribution; let them remember the vanity of youthful pleasures, and the uncertainty of human life; and let them anticipate those reflections which, neglecting this advice, they may hereafter make on their own conduct, when oppressed with pain and terror, or when condemned at the tribunal of the righteous Judge.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. Old Age and Death.—Ver. 2—7. This figurative description of old age and its infirmities has furnished the critics with much employment, and a fine field for the display of their ingenuity; but such matters must here be handled with great brevity. In old age, the relish for all pleasures is lost, and men grow indifferent even to those objects which once occasioned the most agreeable sensations: so that the sun, with its pleasant light, and the beautiful moon and stars, are, as it were, obscured to them; or the understanding, imagination, memory, and judgment, the lights of the mind, are so impaired, that they seem darkened.—One affliction or pain succeeds another, as clouds return after heavy showers in a rainy season. The hands and arms, with which a man defends himself from assaults or accidents, as watchmen keep the house, grow feeble, and tremble when their help is requisite. The legs and thighs, which as strong men support the body, seem in old age to bend under its weight. The teeth, which used to grind the food, are most of them gone; and the few that remain are become useless. The eyes by which the soul looked, as it were, out at the windows, grow dim. Men become disinclined or incapacitated to open their mouths in public debates, having lost their voice with their teeth; or they have no inclination to eat, as they cannot grind or chew their

THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

THERE can be no reasonable doubt but that Solomon was the writer of this book, as well as of the two which precede: "and that it was always looked upon as a holy book, treating of some spiritual and divine matter, appears from its being placed among the rest of that kind."—PATRICK. It is indeed evident, that it was received among the canonical books of the Jews (probably by Ezra, an inspired writer) soon after the Babylonish captivity; and that it formed a part of that sacred volume which, in the time of Christ, was called "the Scriptures," and "the oracles of God." It does not, indeed, appear that it was expressly quoted by any writer of the New Testament; yet the coincidence of its general argument, and of particular sentiments, with many passages in both the Old and New Testament, is well worthy of consideration (Ps. xlv.; Isa. liv. 5; lxi. 10; lxii. 4, 5; Hos. ii. 16-20; Matt. ix. 15; xx. 2; xxv. 1-11; John iii. 29; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 23-27; Rev. xix. 7-9; xxi. 2, 9; xxii. 17. Compare also i. 4 with John vi. 44; iv. 7 with Eph. v. 27; v. 2 with Rev. iii. 20; vii. 1 with Isa. lii. 7, Eph. vi. 15; viii. 11 with Isa. v. 1-7, Matt. xxi. 33, 43; and viii. 14 with Rev. xxii. 20). This coincidence, joined with the general testimony both of the Jewish and Christian church, through a long succession of ages (with but few exceptions, and those not peculiarly decided in respect of evangelical truth and piety), gives the book a very high sanction, not only as genuine, but also as divinely inspired. Learned men have bestowed much pains in shewing the occasion on which Solomon wrote this sacred poem; and most of them imagine that it was composed on his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter; but this is doubtful (Note, i. 2): nor is it certain that it was written so early in his reign; for some think that the tower of Lebanon was not built till a considerable time after that event (vii. 4). In short, this song is a divine allegory in the form of a pastoral, which represents the reciprocal love betwixt Christ and His church, under figures taken from the relation and affection which subsist betwixt a bridegroom and his espoused bride—an emblem continually employed in Scripture. It hath some reference to the state of the Jewish church, as waiting for the coming of the promised Messiah: but it likewise accords to the fellowship betwixt Christ and true believers in every age. In order properly to understand it, we must consider the Redeemer as loving and beloved of his church. The marriage contract is already ratified, but the completion of this blessed union is reserved for the heavenly state. Here on earth the believer loves and rejoices in an unseen Saviour, and seeks his happiness from His spiritual presence; Christ manifests himself to him as He doth not unto the world; and these visits are earnests and foretastes of heavenly joy. But they are interrupted, suspended, or varied on many accounts: they are often lost by negligence or other sins, and can only be recovered by humble repentance and renewed diligence; yet the love on both sides remains unchanged as to its principle, though varied in the expressions of it. These things are represented in a sort of dialogue, in which the church speaks of Christ, or to Him, and He answers, and addresses the church: and the daughters of Jerusalem (who seem to denote such as are inquiring after this salvation) are frequently addressed, and reply: thus the varying experiences and correspondent duties of the believer are delineated in a very animating and edifying manner. But the book should be read with great abstraction of mind from outward things, and with much prayer, lest the carnal passions should be kindled, instead of the spiritual affections being invigorated. And, as it is impossible for any one to enter profitably into the meaning of the inspired writer who has no spiritual experience of the subject, so an ungodly man will seldom read it with advantage, or indeed without detriment. Nor is it any objection to the excellency and usefulness of this sacred poem, to allow that it is peculiarly capable of becoming "a savour of death unto death" to "those who wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction." The spiritual meaning—that is, the instruction intended to be given by the Holy Spirit, speaking by Solomon—should then be principally inquired after; and too minute investigation of the external images under which it is couched, or of the circumstances and arrangement of the poem (according to the rules of modern criticism), will, I apprehend, be found rather unfavourable to edification than conducive to it.

3 Because of the savour of thy good ointments, thy name is as ointment[1] poured forth, therefore do [g]the virgins love thee.

4 [h]Draw me, [i]we will run after thee: [k]the king hath brought me into his chambers: we will be glad and rejoice in thee, we will remember thy love more than wine: *the upright love thee.

food without pain and difficulty; or they keep at home and retired, their doors being shut towards the street, because they cannot digest their food as formerly. Their rest is so easily disturbed, that they awake, and rise up, uneasy and alarmed, at the least noise, as the singing of a bird, or the crowing of the cock. The voice and the ear, those daughters of music, are no longer capable of performing their functions, or the spirits are too dull to let them attend with satisfaction. Every ascent in the way terrifies them, on account of the labour of climbing; they shun every high place, through fear of falling from it; nay, they feel themselves so feeble and clumsy, that they dread being thrown down, or run over, whenever they walk out. Their heads, covered with white hair, seem to blossom like the almond-tree; every little inconvenience, like the weight or the chirping of the grasshopper, is a burden to them, and renders them fretful; or they are bowed, so that their backbone projects like that of a locust, and they have no longer any desire after, or relish for animal pleasures. Thus man draws nigh to the end of his journey, and will shortly be at his "long home," or his "home of ages." The grave may in some sense be thus called; but the eternal state of happiness or misery, to which the soul removes at death, and to which the body will follow at the resurrection, is far more emphatically so called. When this takes place, others will, either sincerely or insincerely, mourn for him, as he formerly did for others. Then the "silver cord will be loosed;" which may mean the inexplicable union between body and soul; or the spinal marrow, which continues sensation by the nerves from the brain, to every part of the body. Or the whole verse may be a description of the functions of life, taken from a well; where is a cord to the bowl or bucket, with which the water is drawn, a wheel by which the more easily to raise it, a cistern into which it may be poured, and a pitcher, or vessel, to carry it away with; but now all are broken or loosened, and become useless. Thus at death, the lungs cease to play, the heart ceases to beat, the blood to circulate; every vessel becomes useless, the whole surprising contrivance for forming and communicating the blood, which is the life, from the fountain of the heart to every extremity of the body, is now entirely deranged: the silver cord is loosed, the golden bowl is broken, the pitcher and the wheel are marred at once. Then the body returns to its dust, and the soul to God the Creator, to be fixed in a state of happiness or misery, according to the things done in this present life.—Scott.

CHAP. I. CHARACTER AND CONTENTS OF THE BOOK.—Ver. 1. We have here the title of this book, showing, 1, The nature of it; it is a "song," that it might the better answer the intention, which is to stir up the affections, and to heat them, which poetry will be very instrumental to do. The subject is pleasing, and therefore fit to be treated of in a song, in singing of which we may "make melody with our hearts unto the Lord." It is evangelical; and gospel-times should be times of joy, for gospel-grace puts "a new song" into our mouths, Ps. xcviii. 1. 2. The dignity of it; it is "the song of songs," a most excellent song; not only above any human composition, or above all the other songs which Solomon penned, but even above any other of the scripture-songs, as having more of Christ in it. 3. The penman of it; it is Solomon's; it is not the song of fools, as many of the songs of love are, but the song of the wisest of men; nor can any man give a better proof of his wisdom than to celebrate the love of God to mankind, and to excite his own love to God and that of others with it. Solomon's songs were a thousand and five, 1 Kings iv. 32: those that were of other subjects are lost, but this of seraphic love remains, and will, to the end of time. Solomon, like his father, was addicted to poetry, and, which way soever a man's genius lies, he should endeavour to honour God, and edify the church with it. One of Solomon's names was "Jedidiah, beloved of the Lord," 2 Sam. xii. 25; and none so fit to write of the Lord's love, as he that had himself so great an interest in it; none of all the apostles wrote so much of love, as he that was himself the beloved disciple, and lay in Christ's bosom. Solomon, as a king, had great affairs to mind and manage, which took up much of his thoughts and time, yet he found heart and leisure for this and other religious exercises. Men of business ought to be devout men, and not to think that their business will excuse them from that which is every man's great business—to keep up communion with God. It is not certain when Solomon penned this sacred song; some think that he penned it after he recovered himself by the grace of God from his backslidings, as a further proof of his repentance, and as if, by doing good to many with this song, he would atone for the hurt he had perhaps done with loose, vain, amorous songs, when he "loved many strange wives;" now he turned his wit the right way. It is more probable that he penned it in the beginning of his time, while he kept close to God, and kept up his communion with him; and perhaps he put this song, with his father's psalms, into the hands of the chief musician, for the service of the temple, not without a key to it, for the right understanding of it. Some think that it was penned upon occasion of his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter, but that is uncertain; the tower of Lebanon, which is mentioned in this book, chap. vii. 4, was not built, as it is supposed, till long after that marriage. We may reasonably think that when in the height of his prosperity he "loved the Lord," 1 Kings iii. 3, he thus "served him with joyfulness and gladness of heart in the abundance of all things." It may be rendered, "The song of songs, which is concerning Solomon," who, as the son and successor of David, on whom the covenant of royalty was entailed, as the founder of the temple, and as one that excelled in wisdom and wealth, was a type of Christ, in whom are "hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," and yet is a greater than Solomon; this is therefore a song concerning him. It is here fitly placed after "Ecclesiastes;" for when by that book we are thoroughly convinced of the vanity of the creature, and its insufficiency to satisfy us, and make a happiness for us, we shall be quickened to seek for happiness in the love of Christ, and that true transcendent pleasure which is to be found only in communion with God through him. The voice in the wilderness, that was to prepare Christ's way, cried, "All flesh is grass."—Henry.

CHAP. II. Christian Experience.—Ver. 3. A double advantage the spouse found in sitting down so near the Lord Jesus. 1. A refreshing shade; "I sat down under his shadow," to be sheltered by him from the scorching heat of the sun, to be cooled, and so to take some rest. Christ is to believers "as the shadow" of a great tree, nay, "of a great rock in a weary land," Isa. xxxii. 2; xxv. 4. When a poor soul is parched with convictions of sin, and the terrors of the law, as David, Ps. xxxii. 4, when fatigued with the troubles of this world; as Elijah, when he "sat down under the juniper tree," 1 Kings xix. 4, they find that in Christ, in his name, his graces, his comforts, and his undertaking for poor sinners, which revives them, and keeps them from fainting; they that "are weary and heavy laden" in Christ may find "rest." It is not enough to pass by this "shadow," but we must "sit down under" it; "here will I dwell," for I have desired it; and we shall find it not like Jonah's gourd, that soon withered, and left him in a heat, both inward and outward, but like the tree of life, the leaves whereof were not only for shelter, but for the healing of the nations. We must "sit down under this shadow with delight," must put an entire confidence in the protection of it, (as Judges ix. 15,) and take an entire complacency in the refreshment of it. But that is not all. 2. Here is pleasing, nourishing food; this tree drops its fruits to those that "sit down under its shadow," and they are welcome to them, and will find them "sweet unto their taste," whatever they are to others; believers have tasted that the Lord Jesus is "gracious," 1 Pet. ii. 3, his "fruits" are all the precious privileges of the new covenant, purchased by his blood, and communicated by his Spirit; promises are sweet to a believer, yea, and precepts too; "I delight in the law of God after the inward man." Pardons are sweet, and peace of conscience sweet, assurances of God's love, joys of the Holy Ghost, the hopes of eternal life, and the present earnests and foretastes of it, are sweet, all things to those that have their spiritual senses exercised.—Henry.

[illegible]'s Love.—Ver. 16, 17. The spouse here again speaks, as one assured [illegible] are become hers by faith; of which her love to him, and [illegible] or himself to be his, devoted to his service, in body and soul, formed the sure evidence; and she rejoices in experiencing that he takes pleasure in visiting and communing with his people, who resemble him in lowliness and purity, and in feeding them in the green pastures of his ordinances; and she begs, that he will continue to favour her with those visits, "till the day break, and the shadows flee away." This may refer to the shadows of the Jewish dispensation, which were dispelled by the breaking of the gospel-day, and the rising of the Sun of Righteousness; or to the darkness and shadows of our state on earth, which will shortly be changed for heavenly light and substantial felicity. The word Bether signifies division; and may intimate the removal of every thing which now divides our souls from him, and from the beatific vision.—Scott.

CHAP. III. Solomon's Espousals.—Ver. 11. This verse contains the most express allusion to the marriage of Solomon, of any in the whole book; but whether to Naamah the Ammonitess, his first wife, as far as we know, or to Pharaoh's daughter, or to some other of his wives, is not said. It seems that it was customary, in ancient times, for the bridegroom or bride, or both, to wear a nuptial crown; and it may be supposed that Solomon's, on such a joyful occasion, would be very magnificent, and it was put on his head by Bathsheba. "O ye daughters of Zion, look upon king Solomon, as he sits solemnly crowned in the day of his greatest royalty and triumph, and compare his highest pomp with the divine magnificence of my Saviour, in that day when his blessed marriage shall be fully perfected above, to the eternal rejoicing of himself and his church, and see whether there be any proportion between them." [Bp. Hall.]—When the sinner finds "peace and joy in believing," and makes an open profession of his faith and love, especially when large multitudes thus join themselves to the Lord, (as was the case on the day of Pentecost,) the happy season may be called the day of the heavenly bridegroom's espousals, and the day of the gladness of his heart; for espousals are not a secret transaction, but the recognition, before proper witnesses, or publicly, of the mutual consent of the two contracting parties to be united in marriage. The church is the [illegible] of Christ, as to his human nature, that is, he was born within the church, and [illegible] crowns him, when through her ordinances believers are thus espoused to him. There his power and grace are displayed; he sees of the travail of his soul, and [illegible] blood; and these are the trophies and monuments of his glorious victories [illegible] world, sin, Satan, and death. Angels in heaven [illegible] on earth rejoice and celebrate the Redeemer's [illegible] to them; he himself rejoices over [illegible]

8 ¶ Come with me from Lebanon, my spouse, with me [t]from Lebanon: look from the top of Amana,[2] from the top of [u]Shenir and Hermon, [x]from the lions' dens, from the mountains of the leopards.

9 Thou hast ‡ravished my heart, my sister, [z]my spouse; thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, with [c]one chain of thy neck.[3]

10 How fair is thy [§]love, my sister, my spouse! [d]how much better is thy love than wine! and the smell of thine ointments than all spices!

11 Thy [f]lips, O my spouse, drop as the honeycomb: honey and milk are under thy tongue; and the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.

12 A garden ‖inclosed is my sister, my spouse; a spring shut up, a fountain sealed.

13 Thy plants [l]are an orchard of pomegranates, with [m]pleasant fruits; *camphire, with [n]spikenard,

14 Spikenard and saffron; [o]calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense; myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices:

15 A [s]fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon.

16 Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out. Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits.

CHAP. V.

Christ awaketh the church with his calling, 1. The church, having a taste of Christ's love, is sick of love, 2. A description of Christ by his graces, 9.

I AM come into my garden, my sister, my spouse: [c]I have gathered my myrrh with my spice; I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk: [d]eat, O friends; drink, *yea, drink abundantly, O beloved.

2 ¶ I sleep, but my heart waketh: it is the voice of my beloved that [h]knocketh, saying, [i]Open to me, my sister, my love, [k]my dove, my undefiled: [l]for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night.

3 I [m]have put off my coat; how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet; how shall I defile them?

4 My beloved [n]put in his hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were moved †for him.

5 I rose up to open to my beloved; and [q]my hands dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with ‡sweet smelling myrrh, upon the handles of the lock.

6 I opened to my beloved; but my beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone: my soul failed when he spake: I sought him, but I could not find him; I called him, but he gave me no answer.

7 The [u]watchmen that went about the city found me, [x]they smote me, they wounded me; [y]the keepers of the walls [z]took away my veil from me.

8 I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, if ye find my beloved, [§]that ye tell him, that [c]I am sick of love.

9 ¶ What [d]is thy beloved more than another beloved, O thou fairest among women? what is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

10 My beloved is white and ruddy, [l]the chiefest among ten thousand.

11 His [h]head is as the most fine gold, his locks are *bushy, and black as a raven.

12 His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and †fitly set.

13 His [l]cheeks are as a bed of spices, as ‡sweet flowers: [n]his lips like lilies, [o]dropping sweet smelling myrrh.

14 His hands are as gold rings set with the beryl: [q]his belly is as bright ivory[2] overlaid with sapphires.

making profession of their faith, by observing how glorious our King appears in saving sinners.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. Beauty of Holiness.—Ver. 1—7. Here is a large and particular account of the beauties of the church, and of gracious souls on whom the image of God is renewed, consisting "in the beauty of holiness." In general, he that is a competent judge of beauty, whose "judgment," we are sure, "is according to truth," and what all must subscribe to, he has said, "Behold, thou art fair." She had commended him, and called all about her to take notice of his glories; hereby she recommends herself to him, gains his favour, and, in return for her respects, he calls to all about him to take notice of her graces. Those that honour Christ, he will honour, 1 Sam. ii. 30. He does not flatter her, nor design hereby either to make her proud of herself, or to court her praises of him; but it is to invite others to think well of her too, and to join themselves to her; Thou art "my love," thou lovest me, and art loved of me, and, therefore, "thou art fair;" all the beauty of the saints is derived from him, and they shine by reflecting his light; it is "the beauty of the Lord our God" that is "upon us," Ps. xc. 17. She was espoused to him, and that made her beautiful. Uxor fulget radiis mariti—The spouse shines in her husband's rays. It is repeated; "Thou art fair," and again, "Thou art fair;" noting not only the certainty of it, but the pleasure he took in speaking of it. As to the representation here made of the beauty of the church, the images are certainly very bright, the shades strong, and the comparisons bold; not proper indeed to represent any external beauty, for they were not designed to do so, but "the beauty of holiness, the new man, the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible." Seven particulars are specified, a number of perfection, for the church is enriched with manifold graces, by "the seven spirits" that "are before the throne," Rev. i. 4; 1 Cor. i. 5, 7.

Invocation of the Spirit.—Ver. 16. "Awake, O north wind, and come, thou south." This is a prayer, 1. For the church in general, that there may be a plentiful effusion of the Spirit upon it, in order to its flourishing estate. Ministers' gifts are "the spices;" when the Spirit is poured out, these "flow" forth, and then the "wilderness becomes a fruitful field," Isa. xxxii. 15. This prayer was answered in the pouring out of the Spirit on "the day of Pentecost," Acts ii. 1, ushered in by a "mighty wind;" then the apostles, who were bound up before, flowed forth, and were "a sweet savour to God," 2 Cor. ii. 15. 2. For particular believers. Note, (1.) Sanctified souls are as gardens, gardens of the Lord, enclosed for him. (2.) Graces in the soul are as spices in these gardens, that in them which is valuable and useful. (3.) It is very desirable that the spices of grace should flow forth both in pious and devout affections. (4.) The blessed Spirit, in his operations upon the soul, is as the "north and the south wind," which "blows where it listeth," and from several points, John iii. 8. There is the north wind of convictions, and the south wind of comforts; but all, like the wind, brought "out of God's treasuries," and "fulfilling his word." (5.) The flowing forth of the spices of grace depends upon the gales of the Spirit; he stirs up good affections, and works in us both to will and to do that which is good.—Henry.

CHAP. V. Lukewarmness.—Ver. 2. The spouse is very dull, yet not utterly inattentive to her spiritual concerns. Her judgment and choice are the same, but her affections are cold, and her services formal: a case, which often occurs in the believer's experience. "I take it to be a description of the dulness which is apt to creep upon the most excellent minds." [Bp. Patrick.]—In this situation she recognizes the voice of her beloved, and hears him knock and request admission. This represents the warnings, reproofs, and invitations to a Christian, when in this drowsy frame; the convictions excited by the Holy Spirit; and the ineffectual desires felt, and the half purposes formed, on such occasions. He perceives that he is faulty, and ought to be more earnest: he is gently admonished of his folly and ingratitude; and yet he yields to inactivity, despondency, or lukewarmness, Rev. iii. 20. The words of Christ, as here stated, are replete with tender affection, and introduced by the most endearing compellations, without the least anger or reproach.

Glory of Christ.—Ver. 9—16. Instruction is conveyed under this description of the comeliness and majesty of the beloved. No doubt, the spiritual excellency and glory of Christ, in his person, mediation, and kingdom, are intended: but, while in some things the meaning is evident, others must be allowed to be more doubtful.—"He is white and ruddy;" this naturally suggests to the mind, his spotless purity and his atoning blood; and it may also denote his mercy to believers, and his terrible vengeance upon his enemies. "He is the chiefest among ten thousand." By him kings reign. He is the King of saints, and of angels; and among ten thousand rivals, he alone is worthy of our affections, and capable of doing us effectual good. "His head as the most fine gold" may denote the perfect righteousness and inestimable benefits of his glorious kingdom, as Head over all to his church: "his locks bushy, and black as a raven," may denote the vigour of his administration; full and black hair being an emblem of youth, as white hair of old age and wisdom, Rev. i. 14: "His eyes, as the eyes of doves, by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and fitly set," may denote his infinite knowledge, connected with purity and love, pleasant to his people, whom he watches over continually, and for whom he orders every thing in perfect wisdom and kindness.—"His cheeks," that is, those glimpses of his glory which we have by faith, and when he lifts up the light of his countenance upon us, are refreshing as the most fragrant spices or flowers. His gracious words from his lips are pure and pleasant like the lily, and distil upon the soul like the sweet-smelling myrrh. His hands, whether stretched forth to communicate blessings to us, or to uphold and defend us, or in any of the operations of his power, are "as gold rings set with the beryl," all well-timed and placed, very precious, beneficial, and regulated in perfect wisdom and love. His "belly," or "bowels," (the known description of compassion and tenderness,) being "as bright ivory, overlaid with sapphires," may denote the glory of his mercy, which endureth for ever; and the unsearchable riches and invaluable privileges, which are conferred with it on all true believers. "His legs as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold," such as might form the support and ornament of some magnificent temple, may denote the firmness, power, and majesty with which he supports his church, and maintains his cause in the world, against all the opposition of earth and hell. "His countenance as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars," denotes the unspeakable glory of his person and work, as fully displayed to the blessed inhabitants of heaven, of which, whilst on earth, we only obtain a few glimpses by faith. "His mouth being most sweet," seems to mean the expressions and pledges of his love, with which his people are favoured; chap. i. 2. But, indeed, concludes the spouse, "He is altogether lovely."—Scott.

CHAP. VI. The Church's Majesty.—Ver. 10. Either Christ here continues his discourse, as in admiration of the spouse, or this is the commendation mentioned in the preceding verse. As applied to the church, it may be descriptive of the gradual dawning of the gospel-day, from the first promise to fallen Adam, till the rising of the Sun of righteousness, and the calling of the Gentiles, or till the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in. On earth, the church reflecting the light of Christ, is "fair as the moon;" in heaven, the fuller view of him, and conformity to him, will render her "clear as the sun;" and both in her militant and triumphant state, she is terrible as an army with banners, or as the heavenly hosts, as some explain the word. The believer also, from his first conversion to his complete victory and salvation, may be represented by the same illustrations.—Scott.

The Shulamite.—Ver. 13. The question is asked, "What will ye see in the Shulamite?" And it is answered, "As it were the company of two armies." 1. Some think she gives this account of herself; she is shy of appearing, unwilling to be looked upon, having, in her own account, no form or comeliness. Alas! says she, "What will you see in the Shulamite?" Nothing that is worth your looking upon; nothing but "as it were the company of two armies" actually engaged, where nothing is to be seen but blood and slaughter. The watchmen had smitten her, and wounded her, and she carried in her face the marks of those wounds, looked as if she had been fighting. She had said, (chap. i. 6,) "Look not upon me, because I am black;" here she says, 'Look not upon me, because I am bloody." Or it may denote the constant struggle that is between grace and corruption in the souls of believers; they are in them "as two armies" continually skirmishing, which makes her ashamed to show her face. 2. Others think her Beloved gives this account of her. "I will tell you what you shall 'see in the Shulamite;' you shall see as noble a sight as that of two armies, or two parts of the same army, drawn out in rank and file; not only 'as an army with banners,' but as 'two armies,' with a majesty double to what was before spoken; she is as Mahanaim, as the hosts which Jacob saw, Gen xxxii. 1, 2, a host of saints, and a host of angels ministering to them; the church militant and the church triumphant." Behold "two armies;" in both the church appears beautiful.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. Reflection on the Union of Christ and his Church.—Precious faith and love, abounding in knowledge and all judgment, and regulated by sagacity, the result of experience and a spiritual mind, tend to the assurance of hope, the increase of holiness, and patient continuance in well-doing. And the edifying discourse of such consistent believers honours Christ, recommends the gospel, silences gainsayers, animates other Christians, and tends to convince and awaken sinners, and will surely meet with the gracious commendation of the Lord. Wherever they meet together to worship, and to commemorate his love, Christ will be, as it were, "held in the galleries," by his delight in them and their services; and to mark the difference betwixt them and formalists, he even expresses his admiration of the fruits of his own grace in them. They may also assure themselves that he will be with them in their afflictions, and their resignation and patient hope under sharp sufferings, is peculiarly pleasant and honourable to him. But when professors of the gospel do no credit to it in their lives, they drive him from their assemblies, and often deceive their own souls. In proportion as we are sure that Christ is our beloved, and that we aim and desire to be devoted to him, we may also be sure that he is our salvation, and that his desire is towards us. And again, when this assurance is genuine, it will cause us more and more to count all but loss for him, and, as far as it consists with our duty in the community, to go forth with him to some sequestered humble retreat, where we may commune with him and his people, and with our own hearts. If then we have tasted his grace, let us seek his assistance in examining ourselves, to see how the vine flourishes, and to take heed that no subtle foxes spoil the tender grapes: let us show our love to Christ by love to his cause, and whilst we add

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH.

Our blessed Lord, just before His ascension, said unto His disciples, "All things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me. Then opened he their understandings, that they might understand the Scriptures" (Luke xxiv. 44, 45). Hence we learn that the sacred volume of the Old Testament was divided, at that time, nearly in the same manner as at present; though there is some difficulty, and not much importance, in exactly determining which books belonged to the prophets, and which to the psalms. The historical books, however, from Joshua to Nehemiah, must have belonged to the prophets, in our Lord's days. Indeed, all the sacred writers were prophets; and evident predictions of remote events are found in almost all the preceding books; but then, the prophetical part comes in rather occasionally, in the midst of other subjects; and in many instances, the prophet seems to have been led by the Holy Spirit to foretel the most important and distant events, while he seemed to himself, or at least might appear to the reader, to be discoursing on another subject. But in the division of the Old Testament on which we now enter, prediction is evidently the principal subject; and other topics are introduced occasionally, on account of some kind of relation which they bear to the predictions: and the prophets knew and avowed that they were foretelling future events. From Moses to Samuel, a succession of them in every age, till the close of the sacred canon. They were, in general, extraordinary instructors, sometimes in aid of the priests and Levites, but more commonly to supply their defects, when they neglected their duty. They were bold reformers, and reprovers of idolatry, iniquity, and hypocrisy—they called the attention of the people to the law of Moses, especially the moral law, the standard of true holiness—they shewed the inefficacy of ceremonial observances without the obedience of faith and love—and they kept up and encouraged the expectation of the promised Messiah, and more fully declared His coming, "His sufferings, and the glory which should follow."

The prophet Isaiah, on whose writings we first enter, is remarkable for the elegance and sublimity of his style and imagery; in which the best judges have decidedly given him the preference to the most admired writers of antiquity. He is equally distinguished by the plain and copious manner in which he speaks of Christ and the times of the gospel: on this account he hath been called the fifth Evangelist. The book opens with sharp rebukes of the people for their idolatry and iniquity, and denunciations of Divine vengeance upon them, but intermixed with encouraging intimations of mercy and predictions of Christ. Afterwards follow various prophecies of judgments about to be executed on several nations, as well as on Judah, through all of which the reader is led to expect future deliverances, and glorious times to the church of God. Then there is inserted an account of Sennacherib's invasion, and of some particulars relating to Hezekiah, that end in a prediction of the Babylonish captivity. The prophet then copiously enlarges upon the deliverance of his people from that calamitous state, in language peculiarly applicable to the spiritual redemption of Christ: at length he drops, in great measure, types and shadows, and speaks in the most emphatical language of His person, sufferings, and glory, and of those things that pertain to the spread of His gospel, and the setting up of His kingdom on earth, until he closes with descriptions which lead the mind to consider the final felicity of the righteous and the misery of the wicked in another world. We shall find the whole book replete with instruction; especially we shall meet with the most decisive internal evidence of its divine original, and it will reflect light on every part of the Sacred Volume, on which all our hopes of happiness are founded.

"Isaiah is certainly one of the most difficult of all the prophets, though perhaps few are sensible of it but they who try to explain him. The profoundness of his thoughts, the loftiness of his expression, and the extent of his prophecy, have made the commentaries hitherto written upon him fall short of a full explication of his book: and he that will undertake to fathom the depths of this prophecy, is in great danger of going out of his own. The prophet seems to have been favoured with an entire view of the gospel state, from the very birth of the Messiah to that glorious period when 'the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdom of the Lord and of his Christ.' In those parts of the exposition where mention is made of the Jews being restored to their own land, &c., let the reader not consider what is said on these obscure subjects as positive assertions, but only as probable conjectures; for in these and such like abstruse matters, a modest man should not pretend to be wise above what is plainly and expressly written."—Lowth.

new fruits of holiness to all those that we have already produced, let us not much regard whether men approve our conduct or not, provided our beloved accept us, and be honoured by us. Let us improve our talents, and employ our influence in observing how believers grow in grace, and young beginners put forth their tender buds, that we may exhort, encourage, warn, and pray for them, as time and occasion may require. —Scott.

CHAP. VIII. Power of Love.—Ver. 6.—Love is a violent, vigorous passion. 1. It is "strong as death;" the pains of a disappointed lover are like the pains of death; nay, the pains of death are slighted, and made nothing of, in pursuit of the beloved object. Christ's love to us was "strong as death;" for he brake through death itself; "he loved us, and gave himself for us." The love of true believers to Christ is "strong as death," for it makes them dead to every thing else; it even parts between soul and body, while the soul, upon the wings of devout affections, soars up to heaven, and even forgets that it is yet clothed and clogged with flesh. Paul, in a rapture of this love, knew not whether he was in "the body, or out of the body." By it a believer is crucified to the world. 2. "Jealousy is cruel as the grave," which swallows up and devours all: those that truly love Christ are jealous of every thing that would draw them from him, and especially jealous of themselves, lest they should do any thing to provoke him to withdraw from them, and, rather than do so, would "pluck out a right eye," and "cut off a right hand," than which what can be more cruel? Weak and trembling saints, who conceive a jealousy of Christ, doubting of his love to them, find that jealousy to prey upon them like the grave, nothing wastes the spirits more; but it is an evidence of the strength of their love to him. 3. "The coals thereof," its lamps, and flames, and beams, are very strong, and burn with incredible fury and irresistible force, as the "coals of fire that have a most vehement flame," a "flame of the Lord," (so some read it,) a powerful, piercing flame, as the lightning, Ps. xxix. 7. Holy love is a fire that begets a vehement heat in the soul, and consumes the dross and chaff that are in it, melts it down like wax into a new form, and carries it upward as the sparks toward God and heaven.—Henry.

The Gentile Church.—Ver. 8, 9. The spouse, (or the church that then was,) seems here to intercede for the Gentiles, from among whom God intended to take a people for his name. The spouse, therefore, calls that future church, "a little sister, that hath no breasts." Though a few believers were even then found among the Gentiles, yet they had not the word of God, or the means of grace, and spiritual union with the promised Saviour. But, in due time, they would "be spoken for" by him; and what was the Jewish church to do for them at that time, as instruments of effecting the gracious purposes of God? To this question Christ answers, "If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver." If the commencement of this work, even the conversion of the Gentiles by the Spirit of Christ, through the preaching of apostles and evangelists, raised up from the nation of Israel, were likened to a wall built upon Him the precious foundation and corner-stone, to become a part of a spiritual temple, they would be so multiplied and enriched in process of time, that the Gentile church would become as a palace for the great King, builded of solid silver, and far more splendid than Solomon's temple. If the first preaching of the gospel to them was compared to the making of a door through the wall of partition, that door should be preserved most effectually as if cased with boards of durable cedar.—Scott.

CHAP. I. Isaiah.—Ver. 1. The name of this prophet, signifying "the salvation of the Lord," was very suitable to the subject, on which he so frequently and delightfully expatiated, and which have procured him the title of "the evangelical prophet," nay of "the fifth Evangelist." Tradition reports that he was of noble birth, and that his daughter was married to Manasseh, and that he was sawn asunder by the command of that idolatrous prince, to which the apostle is supposed to allude, Heb. xi. 37. It must, however, be allowed that these traditions are very uncertain; and some think he did not survive Hezekiah: yet, even in that case, he must have prophesied about sixty years at least.—In general, the reader must be referred to the notes on the second book of Kings, from the fifteenth to the twenty-first chapter, inclusive; and to the second book of Chronicles from the twenty-sixth to the thirty-third chapter inclusive, for the state of Judah and Israel during the term of years, in which Isaiah prophesied.—Many of his prophecies, indeed, relate to other kingdoms; but always on account of their connection, one way or other, with the chosen race.—"The two usual ways whereby God communicated his will to the prophets, were visions and dreams." Num. xii. 6. "In vision the inspired person was awake, but his external senses were bound up, and as it were laid asleep in a trance.—It is called vision, not from any use of the corporeal sight, but because of the clearness and evidence of the things revealed."—"It was sometimes accompanied with external representations."—This chapter may be considered as an introductory address prefixed to the subsequent prophecies; and the title may belong to the book in general, or to the chapter in particular. It is thought that this was not Isaiah's first vision, though placed as an introduction to the rest.—Scott.

18 Come now, [c]and let us reason together, saith the LORD: [d]Though your sins be as scarlet,[6] they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

19 If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land:

20 But [f]if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword: [g]for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

21 ¶ How is [h]the faithful city become an harlot! [k]it was full of judgment; righteousness lodged in it; but now murderers.

22 Thy [l]silver is become dross, [m]thy wine mixed with water:

23 Thy [n]princes are rebellious, [o]and companions of thieves: [p]every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards: [q]they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them.

24 Therefore saith the Lord, the LORD of hosts, [r]the mighty One of Israel, [s]Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies:

25 And I will turn my hand upon thee, and [t]purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin:[7]

26 And [x]I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the beginning: afterward [y]thou shalt be called, The city of righteousness, the faithful city.

27 Zion shall be [z]redeemed with judgment, and [!]her converts with righteousness.

28 ¶ And [a]the [§]destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and [b]they that forsake the LORD shall be consumed.

29 For they shall be ashamed of the oaks[8] which ye have desired, and ye shall be confounded for [*]the gardens that ye have chosen.

30 For [c]ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a [f]garden that hath no water.[9]

31 And [h]the strong shall [i]be as tow, and [!]the maker of it as a spark, and [k]they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them.

Predictions of the establishment, extent, and peace of the church in the days of the Messiah, 1; of the rejection of the Jews for their iniquities and idolatries, 6; of divine judgments, which would be employed to humble their pride, cure them of idolatry, and cause them to cease from confidence in man, 16.

THE word that Isaiah the son of Amoz [a]saw, concerning Judah and Jerusalem.

yet the ox has such a sense of duty, as to know his owner, and to serve him, to submit to his yoke, and to draw in it; the ass has such a sense of interest, as to know his master's crib or manger, where he is fed, and to abide by it; he will go to that of himself if he is turned loose. A fine pass man is come to, when he is shamed even in knowledge and understanding by these silly animals; and is not only sent to school to them, Prov. vi. 6, 7, but set in a form below them, Jer. viii. 7, "taught more than the beasts of the earth," Job xxxv. 11, and yet knowing less. 2. The sottishness and stupidity of Israel. God is their Owner and Proprietor: he made us, and his we are, more than our cattle are ours; he has provided well for us; providence is our Master's crib; yet many that are called the people of God, do not know, and will not consider this; but ask, "'What is the Almighty that we should serve him?' He is not our owner; and 'what profit shall we have if we pray unto him?' He has no crib for us to feed at." He had complained, ver. 2, of the obstinacy of their wills; "They have rebelled against me;" here he runs it up to its cause; "Therefore they have rebelled, because they do not know, they do not consider." The understanding is darkened, and therefore the whole soul is alienated from the life of God, Eph. iv. 18. "Israel does not know," though their land was a land of light and knowledge; "in Judah is God known," yet because they do not live up to what they know, it is, in effect, as if they did not know.

VANITY OF MERE CEREMONIAL.—Ver. 13. "In vain do they worship me," Matt. xv. 9. It was all lost labour, and served not to answer any good intention; for, 1. It was not looked upon as any act of duty or obedience to God; "Who has required these things at your hands?" ver. 12. Not that God disowns his institutions, or refuses to stand by his own warrants; but in what they did they had not an eye to Him that required it, nor indeed did he require it of them, whose hands were full of blood, and who continued impenitent. 2. It did not recommend them to God's favour; he delighted not in the blood of their sacrifices, for he did not look upon himself as honoured by it. 3. It would not obtain any relief for them. They pray, but God will not hear, because they regard iniquity, Ps. lxvi. 18; he would not deliver them, for though they made many prayers, none of them came from an upright heart. All their religious services turned to no account to them. Nay, as odious and offensive God did not only not accept them, but he did detest and abhor them. "They are your sacrifices, they are none of mine; I am full of them, even surfeited with them." He needed them not, Ps. i. 10, did not desire them, had had enough of them, and more than enough. Their coming into his courts he calls "treading them," or trampling upon them, their very attendance on his ordinances was construed into a contempt of them. Their incense, though ever so fragrant, was an abomination to him, for it was burnt in hypocrisy, and with an ill design. Their solemn assemblies he could not away with, could not see them with any patience, nor bear the affront they gave him. The solemn meeting is iniquity.

DIVINE CONDESCENSION.—"Come now, and let us reason together," ver. 18; while your hands are full of blood, I will have nothing to do with you, though you bring me a multitude of sacrifices: but if you wash you, and make you clean, you are welcome to draw nigh to me; come now, and let us talk the matter over." Note, Those, and those only, that break off their league with sin, shall be welcome into covenant and communion with God; he says, "Come now," who before forbade them his courts. See Jam. iv. 8. Or rather thus; there were those among them who looked upon themselves as offended by the slights God put upon the multitude of their sacrifices, chap. lviii. 3. "Wherefore have we fasted," (say they,) "and thou seest not?" They represented God as a hard Master, whom it was impossible to please: "Come," says God, "let us debate the matter fairly, and I doubt not but to make it out 'that my ways are equal, but yours are unequal.'" Ezek. xviii. 25. Note, 1. Religion has reason on its side: there is all the reason in the world that we should do as God would have us to do. 2. The God of heaven condescends to reason the case with those who contradict him and find fault with his proceedings, for "he will be justified when he speaks," Ps. li. 4. The case needs only to be stated, (as it is here very fairly,) and it will determine itself. God shows here upon what terms they stood, (as he does, Ezek. xviii. 21, 24; xxxiii. 18, 19,) and then leaves it to them to judge whether they were not fair.

FORGIVENESS.—Ver. 18. First, All their sins should be pardoned to them, and should not be mentioned against them: "Though they be as red as scarlet and crimson, though you lay under the guilt of blood yet, upon your repentance, even that shall be forgiven you, and you shall appear in the sight of God as white as snow." Note, The greatest sinners if they truly repent, shall have their sins forgiven them, and so have their consciences pacified and purified. Though our sins have been as scarlet and crimson, a deep dye, a double dye, first in the wool of original corruption, and afterwards in the many threads of actual transgression, though we have been often dipped, by our many backslidings, into sin, and though we have lain long soaking in it, as the cloth does in the scarlet dye, yet pardoning mercy will thoroughly discharge the stain, and, being by it purged as "with hyssop, we shall be clean," Ps. li. 7. If we make ourselves clean by repentance and reformation, ver. 16, God will make us white by a full remission. Secondly, They should have all the happiness and comfort they could desire; "Be but willing and obedient, and 'you shall eat the good of the land,' the best of provision; you shall have all the blessings of the new covenant, of all dispensations, of the land of rest, [illegible]

3 And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD,[1] to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

4 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; [k]and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into [†]pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

CHAP. II. GLORY OF THE LATTER DAY.—Ver. 2—5. "The last days," or "the latter days," signify the times of the Messiah, by the common consent of expositors, without excepting even those of the Jews. As Solomon's temple, the centre of Israel's worship, was placed upon a mountain, to which the people resorted with their sacrifices from distant places; so the church of Christ and its instituted worship are represented as a temple built upon a mountain. The establishment of his religion, by the abrogation of the Mosaic dispensation, and on the ruins of idolatry; and the advancement of his kingdom above all the kingdoms of the earth, are predicted, by the figure of "the mountain of the LORD's house being established 'on the top' of the mountains, and exalted 'above' the hills." The calling of the Gentiles, the success of the gospel in the apostles' days, and that far more extensive propagation of it which is yet to come, are predicted under the image of all nations flowing to this mountain of the Lord's house, as all rivers flow into the ocean. The earnestness of each new convert to bring others with him to the knowledge of Christ and to a life of holiness, is expressed, by the people inviting one another to go up to the house of God to be instructed in his ways. When apostles and evangelists of the Jewish nation went forth to preach the gospel to the Gentiles, "'a law' went forth out of Zion and the word of God from Jerusalem;" for Christ is a Prince as well as a Saviour, and his word contains precepts to be obeyed, as well as truths to be believed. By the establishment of the gospel, the Lord becomes "Judge" among the nations, who willingly submit to his authority, and make him the arbiter of their differences; and by his rebukes and convictions, the lessons he teaches, and the grace he bestows, he promotes peace as well as purity. If all men were consistent Christians, there could be no war: as far as Christianity hath prevailed on earth, wars have been conducted with far greater humanity, than before; as far as it prevails in our hearts, it disposes us to peace and love; and we may assuredly expect such a general propagation of the gospel, as will literally fulfil the terms of this prophecy, in the universal prevalence of peace and industry; and then war shall never more be a "science" and "occupation." There needs no other proof, that the grand accomplishment of this prophecy is reserved for some future period, than the consideration, that nothing in any measure answerable to these expressions has yet occurred on earth.—The prophet closes his prediction [illegible] advantages, and not to reject the gos- [illegible] intended to instruct future ages, [illegible] Book of the [illegible] monarchies, Dan. ii. 35, and the fullness of Jews and Gentiles are come into the church. Mic. iv. Yet both these prophecies may be partly fulfilled in the several advances which Christ's kingdom makes in the world, who is described as "going forth conquering and to conquer. Rev. vi. 1.—This seems to have been a maxim in interpreting prophecies, received among the Jews before Christ's time; that wherever they perceived an imperfect completion of prophecy in an historical event, which no way answered the lofty expressions and extensive promises, which the natural sense of the text imported; there they supposed the times of the Messiah to be ultimately intended, "in whom all the promises of God are yea and amen." To prevent any misunderstanding, it may be likewise proper to take notice, that this "mystical sense" of the prophecies is now and then, but not so fitly, called a "secondary sense;" not as if it were less principally intended by the prophets; but rather with respect to the time, because it is the last ultimate completion of their predictions. The times of the Messiah are the times for his coming to the end of the world.—Scott.

CHAP. III. NATIONAL JUDGMENTS.—Ver. 1—9. The prophet calls upon all men to behold and observe, for "the Lord," their governor, "even JEHOVAH of hosts," or armies, was about to deprive Jerusalem and Judah of every stay and support, as well as to reduce them to extremities for want of bread and water. He would speedily cause to cease from among them able commanders and valiant soldiers, active magistrates, faithful teachers and prophets, prudent and experienced counsellors, honourable rulers, expert artificers or builders who might have fortified the city, and eloquent orators who might have influenced the people to unite for their own defence; and their very princes should be mere children in years and want of experience. This was fulfilled after the death of Josiah, by the succession of his sons and grandsons in their early youth, and by their foolish and infatuated counsels. During those feeble reigns, the people had license to oppress each other, and all distinctions in society seemed to be abolished; so that children, and the vilest of the people, treated the most ancient and honourable with insolence and contempt. In such circumstances, offices of trust and honour must become so burdensome, that none would be willing to fill them; whilst every one would see the necessity of some exerting themselves to repress internal distractions, and to provide for the public security. Yet the people would be so impoverished, that very few could bear the expense of the magistracy; so that if any one was decently clothed, that would be deemed a considerable [illegible] and his brethren would be ready to [illegible] and to

[2] The expression alludes to the cloud over the tabernacle, wherein was the ark, the glory of Israel, which prefigured the true glory of the church. As that cloud formed the covering, or defence, upon the ark, so the Almighty God will create a defence upon His people's glory.—MACCULLOCH.
[3] And whereas the church shall be still subject to the scorching heats and tempestuous storms of persecution, God shall erect a safe tabernacle for her, to shade her from the heat, and shelter her from those violent tempests.—HALL.

ready to make oath that he was not in circumstances for such a charge, having neither bread nor clothing at home adequate to the expense. Or every one would be so concerned for his present ease, and so anxious to shift for his own safety, that no one would trouble himself about the public. For, in fact, the city and land would be ruined and desolated.—Scott.

PRIDE OF THE DAUGHTERS OF ZION.—Ver. 16—28. Two things they here stand indicted for, haughtiness and wantonness; directly contrary to that "modesty, shamefacedness, and sobriety, with which women ought to adorn themselves," 1 Tim. ii. 9. They discovered the disposition of their mind by their gait and gesture, and the lightness of their carriage. They are haughty, for they "walk with stretched-forth necks," that they may seem tall, or, as thinking nobody good enough to speak to them, or, to receive a look or a smile; their eyes are wanton; "deceiving," so the word is; with their amorous glances they draw men into their snares; they affect a formal starched way of going, that people may look at them, and admire them, and know they have been at the dancing school, and have learned the minnet-step; they go "mincing" or nicely tripping, not willing to set so much as the sole of their foot to the ground, for tenderness and delicacy; they make a "tinkling with their feet," having, as some think, chains, or little bells, upon their shoes, that made a noise; they go "as if they were fettered;" so some read it; like a horse trammelled, that he may learn to pace. Thus Agag came delicately, 1 Sam. xv. 32. Such a nice affected mien is not only a force upon that which is natural, and ridiculous before men, men of sense; but as it is an evidence of a vain mind, it is offensive to God. And two things aggravated it here, 1. That these were the daughters of Zion the holy mountain, who should have behaved with the gravity that becomes women professing godliness. 2. That it should seem, by the connection, they were the wives and daughters of the princes who spoiled and oppressed the poor, ver. 14, 15, that they might maintain this pride and luxury of their families.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. REFORMATION—GOD'S WORK.—Ver. 4—6. "The Lord shall do it:" reformation-work is God's work; if any thing be done to purpose in it, it is his doing. But how? By the judgment of his providence the sinners were destroyed and consumed; but it is by the Spirit of his grace that they are reformed and converted. This is work that is done, not by might, or by power, but by the "Spirit of the Lord of hosts," Zech. iv. 6, working both upon the sinners themselves that are to be reformed, and upon magistrates, ministers, and others that are to be employed as instruments of reformation. The Spirit herein acts, 1. As a Spirit of judgment, enlightening the mind, convincing the conscience, as a Spirit of wisdom, guiding us to deal prudently, Isa. iii. 13, as a discerning distinguishing Spirit, separating between the precious and the vile. 2. As a Spirit of burning, quickening and invigorating the affections, and making men zealously affected in a good work. The Spirit works as fire, Matt. iii. 11. An ardent love to Christ and souls, and a flaming zeal against sin, will carry men on with resolution in their endeavours to "turn away ungodliness from Jacob."—Henry.

CHAP. V. PRIVILEGE.—Ver. 1, 2. Great things God had done for the Jewish church and nation: when all the rest of the world lay in common, not cultivated by divine revelation, that was his vineyard, they were his peculiar people; he owned them, set them apart for himself; the soil they were planted in was extraordinary; it was "a very fruitful hill, the horn of the son of oil;" so it is in the margin. There was plenty, a cornucopia; and there was dainty, they did there eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and so were furnished with abundance of good things to honour God with in sacrifices and free-will offerings. The advantages of our situation will be brought into the account another day. Observe further, what God did for this vineyard: 1. He fenced it; took it under his special protection, kept it night and day under his own eye, lest any should hurt it, chap. xxvii. 2, 3. If they had not themselves thrown down their fence, no inroad could have been made upon them, Ps. cxxv. 2; cxxi. 4. 2. He gathered the stones out of it, that, as nothing from without might damage it, so nothing within might obstruct its fruitfulness. He proffered his grace to take away the stony heart. 3. He planted it with the choicest vine, set up a pure religion among them, gave them a most excellent law, instituted ordinances very proper for the keeping up of their acquaintance with God, Jer. ii. 21. 4. He built a tower in the midst of it, either for defence against violence, or for the dressers of the vineyard to lodge in; or rather, for the Owner of the vineyard to sit in, to take a view of the vines, Cant. vii. 12, a summer-house. The temple was this tower, about which the priests lodged, and where God promised to meet his people, and gave them the tokens of his presence among them, and pleasure in them. 5. He made a wine-press therein, set up his altar, to which the sacrifices, as the fruits of the vineyard, should be brought.—Henry.

JUST PENALTY.—Ver. 3, 4. Perhaps the Jews murmured at the judgments denounced against them; but the Lord here offered to make them judges in his controversy with his vineyard, as a judge, before he passes sentence, asks the criminal what he can urge, why he should not be condemned. With the manifold advantages, and encouragements to holiness, that they enjoyed, and the promises of special assistance contained in their Scriptures, they ought to have been a peculiar people, zealous of good works; nor could they mention any thing, which ought to be done for them, that God had not done, or pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: [q]I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

7 For the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah [l]his pleasant plant: and [s]he looked for judgment, but behold [*]oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry.

8 ¶ Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay [x]field to field, till there be no place, that [†]they may be [y]placed alone in the midst of the earth!

9 [‡]In mine ears said the LORD of hosts, [§]Of a truth many houses shall be [z]desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant.

10 Yea, ten acres of vineyard shall yield [a]one bath,[3] and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah.

11 ¶ Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine [l]inflame them!

12 And the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine are in their feasts;[4] but [d]they regard not the work of the LORD, neither consider the operation of his hands.

13 Therefore [e]my people are gone into captivity, [f]because they have no knowledge; and [*]their honourable men are famished, and [g]their multitude dried up with thirst.

14 Therefore hell hath enlarged herself,[5] and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it.

15 And [l]the mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled, and [m]the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled:

16 But the LORD of hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and [†]God that is holy shall be [o]sanctified in righteousness.

17 Then [p]shall the lambs feed after their manner, and [q]the waste places of the fat ones shall [r]strangers eat.

18 ¶ Woe unto them that [s]draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart-rope:[6]

19 That say, [t]Let him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it: and [u]let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we know it!

20 ¶ Woe unto [x]them that [‡]call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!

21 Woe unto them that are [y]wise in their own eyes, and prudent [§]in their own sight!

22 Woe unto them that are [z]mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink;

23 Which [a]justify the wicked [b]for reward, and [c]take away the righteousness of the righteous from him!

24 Therefore, as the [l]fire [d]devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust; because they have [g]cast away the law of the LORD of hosts, and [h]despised the word of the Holy One of Israel.

25 Therefore is [i]the anger of the LORD kindled against his people, and he hath [k]stretched forth his hand against them, and hath smitten them: and the hills did tremble,[7] and their carcases were [*]torn in the midst of the streets. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

26 ¶ And [n]he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will [o]hiss[8] unto them [p]from the end of the earth: and, behold, [q]they shall come with speed swiftly.

27 None [r]shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; [s]neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed,[9] [t]nor the latchet of their shoes be broken:

28 Whose [u]arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent, [x]their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind:

29 Their [y]roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions; yea, they shall roar, and [z]lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it.

30 And in that day they shall roar against them, [a]like the roaring of the sea: and [b]if one look unto the land, behold darkness and [†]sorrow; and the [‡]light is darkened in the heavens thereof.

CHAP. VI.

Isaiah, by a vision of God's glory and the adoring seraphim, is greatly dismayed: but encouraged by a seraph touching his lips with a coal from the altar, 1. He receives a commission, shewing the event of his prophetical labours, in the obduracy and ruin of the people; with an intimation of a remnant to be spared, and a holy seed to spring from them, 8.

IN [a]the year that king Uzziah died, [b]I saw also the Lord [c]sitting upon a throne,[1] [d]high and lifted up, and [*]his train[2] [e]filled the temple.

was not ready to do, whenever they asked him. So that they could assign no reason for their wickedness, but the desperate depravity of their own hearts. "From this, among many other texts of Scripture, we may conclude, that those may have 'sufficient means' of grace afforded them, who nevertheless are not actually or 'effectually' converted." [Lowth.]—This is clear and satisfactory; but the "sufficient grace," which yet proves "insufficient," is not very intelligible. "Sufficient means" leave no insurmountable obstacle, were the heart properly disposed; but "sufficient grace" properly disposes it. Neither of these, however, can be to a "sinner" a matter of "debt," but wholly of "grace."—"What was there more 'to be done' to?" &c. This seems the literal translation: not that God had done all that was in his power, and so was disappointed when he failed of success: but that he had done all that was proper, or could reasonably have been expected. Ver. 5, 6. The Lord next passed sentence on the vineyard, and informed the people what he meant to do with it. He would withdraw his protection; give up the land, city, and temple to be ravaged by their enemies; deprive them of the means of grace, and leave many of them to mingle with the heathen; nay, he would "command the clouds to rain no rain upon them;" he would awfully withhold the sanctifying influences of his Spirit. This was in part, and for a time, fulfilled during the Babylonish captivity; but far more exactly in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; their exclusion from the church; their long-continued dispersion without priest or prophet, and without heavenly influences on any means of grace to render them effectual.—Scott.

INSTRUMENTS OF DIVINE VENGEANCE.—Ver. 26—30. When God comes forth in wrath against a people, the hills tremble, fear seizes even their great men, who are strong and high, the earth shakes under men, and is ready to sink; and as this feels dreadful, (what does more so than an earthquake?) so what sight can be more frightful than the carcasses of men torn with dogs, or thrown "as dung (so the margin reads) in the midst of the streets?" This intimates that great multitudes should be slain, not only soldiers in the field of battle, but the inhabitants of their cities put to the sword in cold blood, and that the survivors should neither have hands nor hearts to bury them. This is very dreadful, and yet such is the merit of sin, that, "for all this, God's anger is not turned away;" that fire will burn as long as there remains any of the stubble and chaff to be fuel for it: and his hand which he stretched forth against his people to smite them, because they do not by prayer take hold of it, nor by reformation submit themselves to it, is stretched out still. Here we have an account of the instruments that should be employed in bringing this ruin upon them; it should be done by the incursion of a foreign enemy, that should lay all waste: no particular enemy is named, and therefore we are to take it as a prediction of all the several judgments of this kind which God brought upon the Jews; Sennacherib's invasion soon after, and the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans first, and at last by the Romans; and I think it is to be looked upon also as a threatening of the like desolation of those countries which harbour and countenance those sins mentioned in the foregoing verses: it is an exposition of those woes.—Henry.

CHAP. VI. ISAIAH'S VISION.—Ver. 1—4. This "throne, high and lifted up," seems to have been the place of the mercy-seat, over which the glory of the Lord used to appear, and where he reigned as the God of Israel, and of the whole earth; and as an exterior symbol of his majesty, his train, or the skirts of his robes, filled the whole temple.—"Above," or rather "over against" this throne, stood the seraphim, the burning ones, the most glorious of the angelic orders, glowing with the holy flame of divine love. They "stood," as employed in celebrating his praises, and prepared to execute his mandates. Each of them had "six wings; with twain he covered his face;" an emblem of his inability steadfastly to behold, or fully to comprehend, all the glory of the Lord, and of profound reverence and adoring awe. "With twain he covered his feet;" denoting humility, as conscious that he and his services were unworthy the notice of the Lord, or even of the other seraphim in his presence. "And with twain he did fly;" representing prompt celerity and alacrity in executing the will of God. At the same time they sang aloud responsive to each other, "Holy, holy, holy is the LORD of hosts." This threefold repetition hath generally and justly been deemed to refer to the three divine persons in the Trinity, and to the holiness displayed in their several parts in the great work of redemption. For the seraphim seem to celebrate the Lord's holy hatred of sin, as displayed both in the salvation of the gospel, and in the punishment of its opposers; in which respect the whole earth, as well as the heavens, have been, or will be filled with his glory.—Whilst this solemn hymn of praise was echoed from one to another of the angelic worshippers, the "posts," or "pillars," of the porch of the temple shook at every response, and the whole house was filled with smoke, or thick darkness, as when dedicated by Solomon.—Ver. 5. This awful vision of the divine majesty, and the exalted worship of the seraphim, overwhelmed the prophet with a sense of his own vileness, and his humiliation was attended with great dismay. If these glorious spirits thought nothing of their exalted services, what would become of him who had presumed to speak to JEHOVAH with unclean and unhallowed lips? He was sensible also that he "dwelt among a people of unclean lips," of the sinfulness of whose worship he was not fully aware, till "his eyes had seen the King, the LORD of hosts;" and having measured himself by them, he never was before so sensible of his own unworthiness and unfitness for the prophetical his face, and [k]with twain he covered his feet, and [l]with twain he did fly.

3 And [t]one cried unto another, and said, [n]Holy, holy, holy is the LORD of hosts: [‡]the [o]whole earth is full of his glory.

4 And the [§]posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.[1]

5 ¶ Then [r]said I, Woe is me! for I am [l]undone; because I am [s]a man of unclean lips, and [t]I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for [u]mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

6 Then [x]flew one of the seraphims unto me, [*]having a live coal in his hand, [y]which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar:

7 And [z]he [†]laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and [a]thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

8 ¶ Also I heard the voice of the LORD, saying, [c]Whom shall I send, and who will go for [d]us?[2] [e]Then said I, [‡]Here am I; send me.

9 And he said, Go, and tell this people, [§]Hear ye [§]indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not.

10 Make [h]the heart of this people fat, and make [k]their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; [l]lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, [m]and convert, and be healed.[3]

11 Then said I, Lord, how long? And he answered, [o]Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be [‖]utterly desolate, 12 And the LORD have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

13 ¶ But [r]yet in it shall be a tenth, [*]and it shall return, and shall be eaten: as a teil-tree,[4] and as an oak, whose [†]substance is in them, when they cast their leaves, so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.

CHAP. VII.

Ahaz and his people terrified by hearing that the Syrians and Israelites had confederated against them, 1. Isaiah sent to assure Ahaz that they should not accomplish their purpose, but be speedily ruined, 3. Ahaz refuses to ask a sign of God; and Isaiah predicts the miraculous birth of Immanuel, as a sign of preservation to David's family, 10. A prophecy of judgments to be executed on the land by the Egyptians and Assyrians, 17.

AND it came to pass [a]in the days of Ahaz, the son of Jotham, the son of Uzziah, king of Judah, that [b]Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, went up toward Jerusalem to war against it, [c]but could not prevail against it.

2 And it was told [d]the house of David, saying, Syria [*]is confederate with Ephraim:[1] [e]and his heart was moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

3 Then said the LORD unto Isaiah, [f]Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou and [†]Shear-jashub thy son, at [g]the end of the conduit of the upper pool, in the [‡]highway of the fuller's field;

4 And say unto him, [h]Take heed, and be quiet; [i]fear not, [§]neither be faint-hearted for [k]the two tails of these smoking firebrands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

5 Because [l]Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying,

6 Let us go up against Judah, and [l]vex it, and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal:[2]

7 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [m]It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass.

8 For [n]the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin; and [o]within threescore and five years shall Ephraim be broken, [*]that it be not a people.

9 And [p]the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliah's son. [†]If ye [q]will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.

10 ¶ [‡]Moreover the LORD spake again unto Ahaz, saying,

11 Ask thee [r]a sign of the LORD thy God; [§]ask it either in the depth, or in the height above.

12 But Ahaz said, [s]I will not ask, [t]neither will I [u]tempt the LORD.

13 And he said, Hear ye now, [x]O house of David; [y]Is it a small thing for you [z]to weary men; but [a]will ye weary my God also?

14 [‖]Therefore the LORD himself shall give you a sign; [b]Behold, a virgin shall conceive,[3] and bear a son, [*]and shall call his name [c]Immanuel.

15 [d]Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may [e]know to refuse the evil, and choose the good.

16 For [f]before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, [g]the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings.

17 ¶ The LORD shall [h]bring upon thee, and upon thy people, and upon thy father's office, which he now feared would only end in his and their condemnation.—Ver. 6, 7. The Lord was pleased to encourage his dismayed servant by a symbolical action of a seraph, who flew to him with a live coal from off the altar.—The sacred fire from the altar of burnt-offering represents the sacrifice of Christ and its effects: and the live coal applied to the prophet's lips may denote the assurance given him of pardon and acceptance in his work, through the atonement of Christ; and the communication of divine grace, to cleanse away pollution, to kindle the flame of divine love in his heart, and to fit him for the execution of his office with zeal and fervency."—Scott.

CHAP. VII. IMMANUEL.—Ver. 14. "The Hebrew word (here used) most properly signifies a virgin, and so it is translated by all ancient interpreters; and it is never once used in the Scripture in any other sense, as several learned men have proved, against the pretensions of the modern Jews.—The primary signification of the word is concealed; because of the custom of the Eastern countries to keep their virgins concealed from the view of men." [Lowth.]—That the reader may judge of this for himself, I shall point out all the texts in which this word is used in Scripture. Gen. xxiv. 43; Ex. ii. 8; Ps. lxviii. 25; Prov. xxx. 19; Cant. i. 3; vi. x.—"Christ is called 'the seed of the woman,' Gen. iii. 15, as not to be born in the way of ordinary generation." [Lowth]—"The prophecy is introduced in so solemn a manner; the sign is so marked, as a sign selected and given by God himself; the terms of the prophecy are so peculiar, and the name of the child so expressive, containing in them much more than the circumstances of a common child required, or even admitted; that we may easily suppose, that in minds prepared by the expectation of a great Deliverer to spring from the house of David, they raised hope far beyond what the present occasion suggested; especially when it was found, that in the subsequent prophecy this child, called IMMANUEL, is treated as the lord and prince of the land of Judah, viii. 8. Who could this be, other than the heir of the throne of David? Under which character a great and even a divine person had been promised. St. Matthew, therefore, in applying this to the birth of Christ, takes it in its strictest, clearest, and most important sense; and applies it according to the original design and principal intention of the prophet." [Bp. Lowth.]—"Would it not be very unnatural to suppose, that the prophets have been entirely silent concerning this remarkable sign of the Messiah (viz., his being born of a virgin), insomuch that an evangelist should be obliged to accommodate to this singular circumstance a passage which originally had no reference to the Messiah?" [Granville Sharp.] "GOD WITH US; which name can agree to none but to him, who is both God and man." "Thus we are to understand the Messiah's being called IMMANUEL; i.e. as being really what that name imports, GOD WITH US; being both properly and truly God, and also living and dwelling with us men." [Lowth.]—Indeed, the conception and birth of a child, in the ordinary course of things, could scarcely have been called "a sign," whatever name should be given him. The passage cannot be made to accord to any events of those times, as if it meant, "that one, who was at that time a virgin, should be married, and bear a son," &c. The application of the name Immanuel to one who was the governor of the land, chap. viii. 8, can comport with none but the reigning king, or the heir-apparent; but Hezekiah was born before his father Ahaz came to the throne; so that he cannot be meant; and to whom else can the several particulars be made to accord? We can therefore admit of no interpretation (or even accommodation) of the prophecy, except that given by the Evangelist, Matt. i. 23, "that a virgin of the house of David should miraculously conceive, and bear a son, who should be known to the church in all succeeding ages, as Immanuel, God with us," God manifested in the flesh, and become our brother and Saviour. He would be called by this name, as Solomon was called Jedidiah; not that he should have no other name, or be commonly addressed by that name; but as it would properly belong to him, and he would be what that name signified. This sign was given to faith, and would encourage only believers; for it would assure them, that no designs formed to destroy the family of David could be successful, as such a blessing was in it.

NATIONAL DISASTER.—Ver. 21—25. Through the scarcity of inhabitants and of cattle after these desolations, the pastures would be so luxuriant, that a young cow and two ewes would plentifully supply a man's family with milk and butter, which, with honey, would be almost the only remaining productions of the land. Vineyards, that had been let at high rents, (as a thousand vines for a thousand pieces of silver yearly,) would then be overgrown with briers and thorns; and would become the coverts of wild beasts, or the resort of robbers, which the inhabitants should come with bows and arrows to destroy. Nay, the mattock and plough would be generally disused, of which the thorns and briers are figuratively represented as afraid; or the expression may mean, that those places, which were so well cultivated, that no one would have feared their being covered by briers and thorns, would then be overrun with them: in short, agriculture would cease, and the whole land would either become a forest, or a pasture for cattle. The promise made to the Jews, just before the destruction of Sennacherib's army, may intimate, that the land had, during the preceding desolations, been generally left uncultivated, so as to become a forest or pasture land; and could not, till after some time, be converted into corn fields and vineyards.—Scott.

MOREOVER the LORD said unto me, [a]Take thee a great roll,[1] and [b]write in it with [c]a man's pen concerning *Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

2 And [d]I took unto me faithful witnesses to record, [e]Uriah the priest, and Zechariah the son of Jeberechiah.

3 And I [†]went unto [f]the prophetess; and [g]she conceived, and bare a son. Then said the LORD to me, [h]Call his name [i]Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

4 For [k]before the child shall have knowledge to cry, My father, and my mother, [‡]the riches of Damascus, and the spoil of Samaria, shall be taken away before the king of Assyria.

5 ¶ The LORD [l]spake also unto me again, saying,

6 Forasmuch as this people [m]refuseth the waters of [n]Shiloah [o]that go softly, and [p]rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son;

7 Now therefore, behold, the LORD bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory; and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks.

8 And he shall pass through Judah;[2] he shall overflow and go over; he shall reach even to the neck: and [§]the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, [y]O Immanuel.

9 ¶ [z]Associate yourselves, O ye people,[3] [a]and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces.

10 Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand: [d]for God is with us.

11 ¶ For the LORD spake thus to me *with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, 12 Say ye not, A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid.

13 Sanctify the LORD of hosts himself; [i]and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread.

14 And [k]he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling[4] and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel; for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

15 And many among them shall [n]stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken.

16 ¶ [o]Bind up the testimony, seal the law [r]among my disciples.

17 And [s]I will wait upon the LORD, that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him.

18 Behold, I and the children[5] whom the LORD hath given me, are for signs and for wonders in Israel from the LORD of hosts, [z]which dwelleth in mount Zion.

19 And when they shall say unto you, [a]Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter: [c]should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?

20 To [e]the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no [†]light in them.

21 And they shall pass through it hardly bestead and hungry: and it shall come to pass, that when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves, and curse their king and their God, and look upward.

CHAP. VIII. MAHER-SHALAL-HASH-BAZ.—Ver. 1. It is probable that this title was affixed to the prophecy, and it was thus intimated, that the Assyrians would speedily and rapidly execute the predicted vengeance. The prophet "took faithful witnesses to record," that they might be ready to testify, if required, that he wrote the prophecy at the time mentioned, and prior to the events foretold. And his wife, (called the prophetess, either on account of her relation to him, or because she too was endued with the spirit of prophecy,) being pregnant at that time, or lately delivered, he was ordered to give the same name to the child, as a memorial of the prediction, and a token of its accomplishment. For before this child should know how to cry "My father and my mother," which children soon learn, the king of Assyria would seize and carry away the immense riches of Damascus and all the spoil of Samaria. So that this message was delivered soon after the preceding.—Some expositors think, that the "witnesses" and the "record" imply, that Isaiah, on this occasion, married another wife; though it is not said that the mother of Shear-jashub was dead, chap. vii. 3, but others suppose that these witnesses, (who were persons of rank,) though Uriah was a man of very bad character, were called on to attend the circumcision of the prophet's son, and to attest the name by which he was called, as well as the prophecy confirmed or illustrated by that name. —"And I took unto me faithful witnesses, both of this act that I did, in fastening this roll upon the doors of the temple, and the name given to my said son, in his circumcision: for my wife, the prophetess, had conceived and born a son, and the Lord had appointed me to call him by this name." [Bp. Hall.]—It has been thought that these scenes were only acted in vision; but this seems a dangerous liberty in explaining Scripture.—Scott.

GOD OUR REFUGE.—Ver. 14. "'He shall be for a Sanctuary;' make him your Fear, and you shall find him your Hope, your Help, your Defence, and your mighty Deliverer. He will sanctify and preserve you. He will be for a Sanctuary;" 1. "To make you holy; He will be your Sanctification;" so some read it. If we sanctify God by our praises, he will sanctify us by his grace. 2. "To make you easy; He will be your Sanctuary, to which you may flee for safety, and where you are privileged from all the arrests of fear; you shall find an inviolable refuge and security in him, and see yourselves out of the reach of danger." They that truly fear God, shall not need to fear any evil.—Henry.

THE LAW AND THE TESTIMONY.—Ver. 19. The unbelieving Jews were prone to seek information, counsel, and help from diviners and wizards of different descriptions, which was expressly forbidden in the law, and was in fact worshipping the devil. These persons, it seems, used strange fantastic gestures in their incantations; such as peeping out of the corners of their eyes, and muttering as if they spake out of their belly; with other ceremonies suited to their abominable practices. But when the Jews were persuaded to seek unto such persons, they were instructed to inquire, whether a people should not seek to their God? And whether it were right or reasonable to leave the living, to consult the dead; the living God, to consult dead idols, or the spirits of dead men, whom these witches and wizards pretended to bring up to them? Ver. 20. "The law" of God is the standard of duty; his "sure testimony," the standard of truth; his promise, the firm ground of hope. If, therefore, the people wanted instruction, counsel, or encouragement, let them go to the law, truths, and promises of God's word. If they would not receive the prophet's message, or doubted its authenticity, let them recur to the law of Moses and other preceding parts of revelation. Let them prove all their principles and practices by this standard. But if any were so perverse, as to reject and contradict this rule, it was plain they were devoid of spiritual understanding, for no hope or comfort could be found in any other way.—"They have no knowledge, but are blind leaders of the blind."—Philosophical illuminators and enthusiastical pretenders to new revelations, not to be judged of by the law and the testimony, are alike concerned in this decision. Ver. 21, 22. Inevitable and intolerable evils were coming on each of those who rejected the testimony and law of God, to trust in diviners or carnal confidences. None of them would by any means escape the approaching calamities, and all would pass through them in the utmost distress and penury. And when ready to perish with hunger, they would increase their own anguish by impatience; they would curse their king or rulers, for their ruinous measures, and even blaspheme God, while in vain they looked upward for help.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. COMPENSATION FOR SORROW.—Ver. 2. "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light." 1. At this time, when the prophet lived, there were many prophets in Judah and Israel, whose prophecies were a great light both for direction and comfort to the people of God, who adhered to the law and the testimony; beside the written word, they had prophecy; there were those that had showed them how long, Ps. lxxiv. 9, which was a great satisfaction to them, when, in respect of their outward troubles, they "sat in darkness, and dwelt in the land of the shadow of death." 2. This was to have its full accomplishment when our Lord Jesus began to appear as a Prophet, and to preach the gospel in the land of Zebulun and Naphtali, and in Galilee of the Gentiles. And the Old Testament prophets, as they were witnesses to him, so they were types of him. When he came and dwelt in the borders of Zebulun and Naphtali, then this prophecy is said to be fulfilled, Matt. iv. 13—16. Note, (1.) Those that want the gospel,

Joy shall be in the midst of afflictions by the birth and kingdom of Christ, 1. Judgments upon Israel for their pride, 8, hypocrisy, 13, and impenitency, 18.

NEVERTHELESS [a]the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation, when at the first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun,[1] and the land of Naphtali, and afterward did more grievously afflict her [d]by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, in Galilee *of the nations.

2 The people that [e]walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell [f]in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.

3 Thou hast multiplied the nation, and †not increased the joy: they joy before thee according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.

4 ‡For thou hast [l]broken the yoke of his burden, and [m]the staff of his shoulder,[2] the rod of his oppressor, as in the day of Midian.

5 §For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood: ||but this shall be with burning and *fuel of fire.[3]

6 For [q]unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder:[4] and [t]his name shall be called Wonderful, [u]Counsellor, [x]The mighty God, [y]The everlasting Father,[5] The Prince of [z]Peace.

7 Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the LORD of hosts will perform this.

8 ¶ The LORD sent a word into Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel.

9 And [c]all the people shall know, [f]even Ephraim, and the inhabitants of Samaria, that say in the pride and stoutness of heart,

10 The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones; the sycamores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars.

11 Therefore the LORD shall set up the adversaries of Rezin against him, and †join his enemies together;

12 The Syrians before, and the Philistines behind; and they shall devour Israel with ‡open mouth. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

13 ¶ For the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them, [o]neither do they seek the LORD of hosts:

14 Therefore the LORD will cut off from Israel head and tail, branch and rush, in one day.

15 The [r]ancient and honourable, he is the head; and [s]the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail.[6]

16 For §the [t]leaders of this people cause them to err; and they that are ||led of them are *destroyed.

17 Therefore the LORD shall have no joy in their young men, neither shall have mercy on their fatherless and widows: for every one is an hypocrite and an evil-doer, and every mouth speaketh †folly. [z]For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

18 ¶ For [a]wickedness burneth as the fire: it shall devour the briers and thorns,[7] and [c]shall kindle in the thickets of the forest; and they shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke.

19 Through the wrath of the LORD of hosts [d]is the land darkened, and the people shall be as the ‡fuel of the fire: [f]no man shall spare his brother.

20 And [g]he shall §snatch on the right hand, and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied: they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm:

21 Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh: and they together shall be against Judah. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

walk in darkness, and know not what they do, or whither they go; and they dwell in the land of the shadow of death, in thick darkness, and in the utmost danger. (2.) When the gospel comes to any place, to any soul, light comes, a great light, a shining light, which will shine more and more. It should be welcome to us, as light is to them that sit in darkness, and we should readily entertain it, both because it is of such sovereign use to us, and brings its own evidence with it. Truly this light is sweet.—Henry.

THE CHILD BORN.—Ver. 6—7. The connection of this illustrious prophecy with the preceding verse assures us, that the immediate scope of the Holy Spirit in the whole, was to point out the coming and kingdom of Christ. The prophet spake of the predicted blessings, as if already communicated. "Unto us," says he, "a child is born." Angels say, "Unto you," Luke ii. 11; but this child was born for the benefit of us men, of us sinners, of us believers, of all believers from the beginning to the end of the world.—"Unto us a Son is given." The only-begotten Son of God was given to and for us, to become the Son of man, that he might be our surety, sacrifice, advocate, and salvation: he was given by the Father, and he gave himself.—"And the government shall be on his shoulder." The Redeemer rules not only over his people, but over all worlds, as Mediator, for their benefit; and he is able to support the weight of this universal and absolute authority.—"His name shall be called Wonderful;" he is wonderful in his person, as IMMANUEL, God and man; in his love and mercy; in his hatred of sin, and righteous regard to the holy law; in his compassion to the vilest of sinners; in his majesty and humiliation; in his perfect righteousness and willing sufferings; and in the method which he took to baffle Satan, overcome death, reconcile divine justice and mercy, and establish his kingdom by dying on the cross. In every part of his character and work, he may justly "be called Wonderful;" and also, in that his glory is incomprehensible, "for no man knoweth the son but the Father."—He is also the "Counsellor:" the word and wisdom of God came forth from him, to make known his perfections, truths, and will; to be made wisdom to us, and to be our infallible counsellor in all difficulties and perplexities; so that they who depend on his guidance, and pray for his Spirit, are led in the midst of the paths of judgment. For, this child born is indeed "the mighty God," one with, and equal to the Father, according to the sacred mystery of the Trinity in Unity: he possesses all divine attributes, and exercises them through his human nature; and thus is he "mighty" to save his people, and to vanquish and destroy all enemies.—He is also "the everlasting Father:" "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven:" "the everlasting Father" of the whole church, which derives its spiritual being and life from him, as the whole race of men derive their existence from the first Adam, "the author of eternal salvation." "The author of eternity, by whom the church, and every member of it, shall have immortal life." And as he hath loved his church with an everlasting love, so he will for ever live to bless it, as "the Prince of peace:" the great author of reconciliation to God; the giver of peace in the heart and conscience; the Prince, who commands all his subjects to live at peace with each other, and inclines them to follow peace with all men.—"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." When his kingdom is truly set up in the heart, the efficacy of it shall endure and increase for ever; as it is set up on earth, it shall continue to diffuse its influence, till his authority be universally submitted to, and produce universal harmony; so that men shall "beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more;" yet even this shall increase, and be perfecting in heaven.—Scott.

CHAP. X. PRIDE OF THE KING OF ASSYRIA.—Ver. 7—11. See how the king of Assyria, in his pride, magnified himself as his own master, and pretended to be absolute, and above all control; to act purely according to his own will, and for his own honour. "God ordained him for judgment," even the "mighty God established him for correction," Hab. i. 12, to be an instrument of bringing his people to repentance; "howbeit, he means not so, nor does his heart think so," ver. 7. He does not think that he is either God's servant, or Israel's friend; either that he can do no more than God will let him, or that he shall do no more than God will make to work for the good of his people. God designs to correct his people for, and so to cure them of, their hypocrisy, and bring them nearer to him; but was that Sennacherib's design? No, it was the furthest thing from his thoughts: "he means not so." Note, 1. The wise God often makes even the sinful passions and projects of men subservient to his own great and holy purposes. 2. When God makes use of men as instruments in his hand to do his work, it is very common for him to mean one thing, and them to mean another; nay, for them to mean the quite contrary to what he intends. What Joseph's brethren designed for hurt, God overruled for good, Gen. l. 20. See Mic. iv. 11, 12. Men have their ends, and God has his, but we are sure "the counsel of the Lord shall stand." But what is it the proud Assyrian aims at? The heart of kings is unsearchable, but God knew what was in his heart; he designs nothing but to destroy, and to "cut off nations not a few," and to make himself master of them. (1.) He designs to gratify his own cruelty; nothing will serve, but to destroy and cut off. He hopes to regale himself with blood and slaughter; that of particular persons will not suffice, he must cut off nations. It is below him to deal by retail, he traffics in murders by wholesale; nations, and those not a few, must have but one neck, which he will have the pleasure of cutting off. (2.) He designs to 7 Howbeit he meaneth not so,[3] neither doth his heart think so; but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations not a few.

8 For he saith, Are not my princes altogether kings?

9 Is not ᵖCalno ᵍas ʳCarchemish? is not ˢHamath as Arpad? is not ᵗSamaria as Damascus?

10 As my hand hath found ᵘthe kingdoms of the idols, and whose graven images did excel[5] them of Jerusalem and of Samaria;

11 Shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols?

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the LORD hath performed his whole work upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, ᵇI will †punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks.

13 For he saith, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent: and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treasures, and I have put down the inhabitants like ‡a valiant man.

14 And ʰmy hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people: and as one gathereth eggs that are left, have I gathered all the earth; and there was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped.

15 Shall ⁱthe axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith? or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it? as if ˢthe rod should shake itself against them that lift it up, or as if the staff should lift up ⁱ*itself as if it were* no wood.

16 Therefore shall the Lord, the LORD of hosts, send among his fat ones leanness; ⁱand under his glory he shall kindle a burning[6] like the burning of a fire.

17 And ᵐthe light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame: and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briers in one day;

18 And shall consume the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field, *both soul and body: and they shall be as when a standard-bearer fainteth.

19 And the rest of the trees of his forest shall be †few, that a child may write them.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them;[7] ᵃbut shall stay upon the LORD, the Holy One of Israel, in truth.

21 The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God.

22 For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, ˣ*yet* a remnant ‡of them shall return: the consumption decreed shall overflow ˢwith righteousness.

23 For the Lord GOD of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land.

24 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD of hosts, ᵃO my people that dwellest in Zion, ᵇbe not afraid of the Assyrian: he shall smite thee with a rod, ⁱand shall lift up his staff against thee, after the manner of Egypt.

25 For °yet a very little while, and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction.

26 And the LORD of hosts shall ᶠstir up a scourge for him,[8] ᵍaccording to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb: and as his rod was upon the sea, so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt.

27 And it shall come to pass in that day, that ⁱhis burden shall be *taken away from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed ᵏbecause of the anointing.

28 ¶ He is come to ⁱAiath, he is passed to ᵐMigron; at ⁿMichmash he hath laid up his carriages:

29 They are gone over the passage: they have taken up their lodging at ᵖGeba; ᵍRamah is afraid; ʳGibeah of Saul is fled.

30 †Lift up thy voice, O daughter of ˢGallim; cause it to be heard unto ᵗLaish, O poor ᵘAnathoth.

31 ˣMadmenah is removed; the inhabitants of Gebim gather themselves to flee.

32 As yet shall he remain at ʸNob that day: he shall shake his hand against the mount of the daughter of Zion, the hill of Jerusalem.

33 Behold, the Lord, the LORD of hosts, shall lop the bow with terror; and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down, and the haughty shall be humbled.

34 And he shall cut down the thickets of the forests with iron, and Lebanon shall fall ‡by a mighty one.

gratify his own covetousness and ambition, to set up for a universal monarch, and "to gather unto him all nations," Hab. ii. 5. An insatiable desire of wealth and dominion, is that which carries him on in this undertaking.

FOLLY OF SUCH PRIDE.—Ver. 15. "Shall the axe boast itself against him that hews therewith?" Or, "Shall the saw magnify itself against him that draws it?" So absurd are the boasts of this proud man. "O what a dust do I make!" said the fly upon the cart-wheel, in the fable. "What destruction do I make among the trees!" says the axe. Two ways the axe may be said to boast "itself against him that hews with it;" 1. By way of resistance and opposition. Sennacherib blasphemed God, insulted him, threatened to serve him as he had served the gods of the nations: now this was as if the axe should fly in the face of him that hews with it. The tool striving with the workmen is no less absurd than the clay striving with the potter; and as it is a thing not to be justified, that men should fight against God with the wit, and wealth, and power, which he gives them, so it is a thing not to be suffered; but if men will be thus proud and daring, and bid defiance to all that is just and sacred, let them expect that God will reckon with them; the more insolent they are, the surer and sorer will their ruin be. 2. By way of rivalship and competition. Shall the axe take to itself the praise of the work it is employed in? So senseless, so absurd was it for Sennacherib to say, "By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom," ver. 13. It is as if the the rod, when it is shaken, should boast that it guides the hand which shakes it; whereas "when the staff is lifted up, is it not wood still?" So the last clause may be read. If it be an ensign of authority, (as the nobles of the people carried staves, Num. xxi. 18,) if it be an instrument of service, either to support a weak man, or to correct a bad man, still it is wood, and can do nothing but as it is directed by him that uses it. The psalmist prays that God would make the nations to know that they "were but men," Ps. ix. 20, the staff to know that it is but wood.—Henry.

SAFETY OF ISRAEL—THE RUIN OF ASSYRIA.—Ver. 24—26. "The promises of deliverance from Sennacherib's invasion are made only to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, chap. xxxvii. 32, 33; a type of the elect among the Jews, in whom God will fulfil the promises made to them there." Rom. xi. 25, 26. The inhabitants of Judea seem to have [illegible] while Jerusalem, and those who took [illegible] (after the manner of [illegible]

Egyptians in the Red Sea. Ver. 28—34. These verses contain a prophetical description of Sennacherib's march towards Jerusalem, when he desolated all before him, and threatened that city with immediate destruction. The consternation and flight of the inhabitants of the cities near to Jerusalem, is also represented in a very animated and high manner. But when he was almost come to the walls of the city, and shook his hand against the daughter of Zion, as menacing her destruction, with a special enmity to the temple and the worship there performed; the Lord, in whom Hezekiah trusted, lopped off the spreading branches of this cedar with dreadful terror; he slew by a mighty one, an angel of his strength, all his valiant captains; and he cut down a hundred and eighty-five thousand of his soldiers, like the hewing down of a forest. And thus his army, which appeared as Lebanon, fell at once, to the confusion of their haughty leader, and the grateful and triumphant joy of Hezekiah and his people.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. BLESSED RESULTS OF THE GOSPEL.—Ver. 6—9. The effects of divine grace on the minds of men, in the times of the Messiah, are here represented with much beauty under the most significant emblems. Persons of the most dissimilar dispositions and pursuits, and addicted to various kinds of wickedness, would be so changed by the grace of the gospel, that they would become of "one heart, and of one way." The selfish, the penurious, the rapacious, the contentious, the ambitious, the savage, the subtle, and the malicious, would lose their peculiar base dispositions, and become harmless, sincere, peaceable, benevolent, and affectionate; they would live together in harmony, hearken to instruction, and be guided by gentle persuasions and entreaties. So that the change would be as evident and surprising, as if the wolf, the tiger, the lion, the bear, and other fierce carnivorous animals, should learn to be as gentle and harmless as the lamb, the kid, the calf, or the cow; to associate with them, to graze the pasture as they do, or to feed on straw or hay; and should be so tractable that a little child could lead them. Or, as if the asp or the cockatrice should no longer be disposed to bite with envenomed teeth; but should be so inoffensive, that infants might safely play by their holes: for there would be no more a disposition in the inhabitants of Zion, the true church of Christ, to hurt or destroy; the knowledge of the Lord, with all its sanctifying effects, should at length cover the whole earth, even as the waters cover the sea.

3 And shall make him of quick *understanding in the fear of the LORD: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears:

4 But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and †reprove with equity [l]for the meek of the earth: [k]and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth,[3] and [l]with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

5 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

6 The [o]wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the ‡cockatrice' den.

9 They shall [p]not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: [q]for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

10 ¶ And [r]in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, [s]which shall stand for an ensign of the people; [t]to it shall the Gentiles seek: and [u]his rest shall be [§]glorious.

11 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from [a]Pathros, and from [b]Cush, and from [c]Elam, and from [d]Shinar, and from [e]Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12 And he shall [g]set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four ‖corners of the earth.

13 The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah[4] shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.

14 But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west; they shall spoil them of the *east together: they shall †lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey them.

15 And the LORD shall [n]utterly destroy the ‡tongue of the Egyptian sea; and [o]with his mighty wind shall [p]he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over [§]dryshod.

16 And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; [s]like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

are specified. The crucified Saviour, doubtless, as held forth in the preached gospel, is that ensign to which he will assemble the outcasts of Israel, and the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth. United in dependence on, and obedience to, the Prince of peace, that envy, competition, and enmity, which so long kept the Jews and Israelites at variance, shall be finally terminated, their adversaries shall be cut off, and many of their former enemies shall become tributary and obedient to them. For the Lord will then remove all obstacles by the same powerful interposition that he vouchsafed in behalf of Israel, when he separated the tongue, or bay, of the Egyptian, or Red Sea, and destroyed that hinderance to their departure; and with a mighty wind he will so separate the waters of the river, (Euphrates,) in all its streams, that men may pass over dryshod. Thus an highway shall be made for Israel's return, as there was for their ancestors to pass from Egypt unto Canaan. "This part of the chapter contains a prophecy, which certainly remains yet to be accomplished." [Bp. Lowth.]—"This chapter contains a general prophecy of the advancement Christ's kingdom should make in the world. And I take this part of the chapter to foretell those glorious times of the church, which shall be ushered in by the restoration of the Jewish nation; when they shall embrace the gospel, and be restored to their own country, from the several dispersions where they are scattered. This remarkable scene of providence is plainly foretold by most of the prophets of the Old Testament, and by St. Paul." [Lowth.]—Scott.

CHAP. XII. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When the awakened and humbled sinner finds pardon and peace through the atoning blood of Christ, he with thankful heart exclaims, "O LORD, I will praise thee, though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou hast comforted me." But, alas! we are prone to relapse into transgression; and then our heavenly Father is angry with us, and frowns upon us; he bereaves us of our comforts, and inflicts sharp corrections. When these bring us to mourn for our sins, and to renew repentance and humble faith, his anger will be turned away, our comforts will be restored, and our hearts again tuned to celebrate his praises. All these our hopes and comforts are vouchsafed to us sinful creatures, because "God is become our salvation;" and when we rest all our hope on his foundation, "we may trust, and not be afraid." Having JEHOVAH, the eternal God, for our strength and song, we may bid defiance to all our enemies; and though we must encounter difficulties, endure hardships, and experience many sharp conflicts; we have wells of salvation opened on every side; and, drawing from them the waters of life and consolation, by faith and prayer, we may rejoice in the midst of tribulation, and find some foretastes of heaven, in communion with the Lord in this outward sanctuary. The more diligently we attend on the means of grace; and the larger supplies we derive from the fountain of salvation, the more fervent will be our praises of God our Saviour. The glories of his character, and the excellency of all his wonderful works, especially that of our redemption, will be our favourite theme.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. GOD'S ARMY AGAINST BABYLON.—Ver. 3. The persons brought together to lay Babylon waste, are here called, 1. God's "sanctified ones," designed for this service, and set apart to it by the purpose and providence of God; disengaged from other projects, that they might wholly apply themselves to this; such as were qualified for that to which they were called; for what work God employs men in, he does in some measure fit them for. It intimates, likewise, that in God's intention, though not in theirs, it was a holy war; they designed only the enlargement of their own empire, but God designed the release of his people, and a type of the destruction of the New Testament Babylon. Cyrus, the person principally concerned, was justly called "a sanctified one," for he was God's anointed, chap. xlv. 1, and a figure of him that was to come. It is pity but all soldiers, especially those that fight the Lord's battles, should be, in the strictest sense, sanctified ones; it is a wonder they dare be profane ones, who carry their lives in their hands. 2. They are called God's "mighty ones," because they had their might from God, and were now to use it for him. It is said of Cyrus, that in this expedition "God held his right hand," chap. xlv. 1. God's sanctified ones are his mighty ones; whom God calls, he qualifies; and whom he makes holy, he makes strong in spirit. 3. They are said to rejoice in his highness, to serve his glory and the purposes of it with great alacrity. Though Cyrus did not know God, nor actually design his honour in what he did, yet God used him as his servant; (chap. xlv. 4, "'I have surnamed thee as' my servant, though 'thou hast not known me;'") and he rejoiced in those successes by which God exalted his own name. 4. They are very numerous, a multitude, a great people, "kingdoms of nations," ver. 4, not rude and barbarous, but modelled and regular troops, such as are furnished out by well ordered kingdoms: the great God has hosts at his command. 5. They are far-fetched; they come from the end of heaven: the vast country of Assyria lay between Babylon and Persia. God can make those a scourge and ruin to his enemies that lie most remote from them, and therefore are least dreaded.—Henry.

DOOM OF BABYLON.—Ver. 13—15. The governors and state of Babylon would be entirely subverted, as if the heavens and the earth were shaken out of their place; the vanquished armies of the Chaldeans would be pursued as a hunted roe, and scattered like lost sheep; their allies would retire in dismay to their several cities; every one who

5 The LORD hath broken the staff of the wicked, and the sceptre of the rulers.

6 He who smote the people in wrath with [§] a continual stroke, he that ruled the nations in anger, [n] is persecuted, [o] and none hindereth.

7 The whole earth is at rest, and is quiet: [p] they break forth into singing,

8 Yea, the fir-trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying, Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

9 [l] Hell [r] from beneath [s] is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the [*] chief ones of the earth: it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

10 All they shall speak and say unto thee, [t] Art thou also become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?

11 Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols:[2] [x] the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

12 [y] How art thou fallen from heaven, O [†] Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst [z] weaken the nations!

13 For thou hast said in thine heart, [b] I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon [c] the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:

14 I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High.

15 Yet [f] thou shalt be brought down to hell, [g] to the sides of the pit.

16 They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms;

17 That made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof; that [‡] opened not the house of his prisoners?

18 All the kings of the nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own house:[3] was overtaken would be slain without mercy; and all, who united to make a stand, would be speedily cut to pieces; or all the associates of Babylon should share her fate. Ver. 17. Thirst of glory and dominion, and fierce revenge, would render the Medes regardless of riches; so that they would rather execute their prisoners, than spare them for the sake of ransom. Xenophon makes Cyrus open a speech to his army, in this manner, "Ye Medes, and others who now hear me, I well know that ye have not accompanied me in this expedition with a view of acquiring wealth." Ver. 19—22. The vast extent of Babylon, its stupendous walls and gates, and its magnificent buildings and decorations, are celebrated by ancient writers above those of any other city in the world. But after it was taken by Cyrus it began to decline, and soon ceased to be the seat of empire: then its population decreased; at length it was utterly deserted; and the desolate buildings were long the resort of every species of wild beasts and venomous reptiles, so that it was dangerous for travellers to approach them: at length, it was so entirely wasted away, that no remains of it could be found; and, strange to tell, it cannot at present be exactly ascertained where this renowned city stood! As the walls and buildings were formed of brick not very skilfully prepared; perhaps this might conduce to the utter decay of its ruins! but when God is pleased to destroy, nothing can withstand his power.—"It is uncertain what creatures are meant by several of these Hebrew words: particularly what the word searim signifies, which we render satyrs. The word originally signifies goats; and it is supposed, that evil spirits of old time appeared in the shape of goats, upon which account it is sometimes translated devils.—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. SONG OF TRIUMPH OVER THE KING OF BABYLON.—Ver. 9—11. The scene here changes. The regions of the dead are laid open to the imagination, and their inhabitants are seen in commotion at the approach of this proud monarch to join their company; and the mighty kings and captains, (especially they whom the kings of Babylon had destroyed,) are represented as leaving their several thrones in order to meet him: not to condole with, or to welcome him, but to insult over him, as now become like one of them; and as bereft of all his pomp, luxury, music, and mirth; whilst his poor remains on earth are become company and food for the worms. Doubtless this is a poetical description, and the imagery is taken from external objects: but we must remember, that it has truth for its basis, that the wicked remove at death to a place of misery, and that proud malignant spirits do insult and torment each other, Luke xvi. 19—31.—"Here follows a poetical description of the infernal regions, where all the ghosts of the deceased tyrants are represented as rising out of their places, and coming to meet the king of Babylon.—The Hebrew word sheol, which our translation renders hell, or the grave, signifies the state of the dead in general, and is indifferently applied to the good and bad. Here it denotes the infernal mansions of deceased tyrants." [Lowth.]—The word rendered the dead signifies giants: and Mr. Mede seems to think that the rebels of the old world, who perished in the deluge, were especially intended. Ver. 12—15. The Jews here resume the discourse, and address the king of Babylon by the title of "Lucifer, son of the morning." He had been as the morning-star, the first in dignity among the princes of the earth, but he was now fallen from heaven, and utterly debased. This language may refer to the fall of Satan and his angels, as the king of Babylon greatly resembled that arch-apostate in his character and fate. The Jews, exulting in his astonishing fall, upbraid him with his vain ambition and enmity against God. He "had said in his heart, that he would ascend into heaven, and exalt his throne above the stars of God:" he would eclipse all earthly princes, and even rival the God of heaven; nay, he would fix his throne on mount Zion, where God's worshippers used to assemble, and there receive the adorations of his subjects and vanquished foes. "The fall of the apostate angels is not directly recorded in the Old Testament; but it is implied in the distinction the holy writers make between good and evil spirits; and is sometimes alluded to by the prophets, when they threaten destruction to proud and insolent tyrants, who, in imitation of the pride of the devil, exalt themselves against God and his truth; and are the instruments of Satan in promoting idolatry and wickedness in the world. These expressions, as they allude to the rebellion of Satan, who affected to be equal with God; so they contain an exact description of Antichrist, as represented by St. Paul," 2 Thess. ii. 4. [Lowth.]

HIS DEATH AND DEGRADATION.—Ver. 16—20. The subject is here diversified by another scene. The dead body of the king of Babylon is found, narrowly examined, and recognised, by some that had known him in his prosperity; and they express their surprise and contempt by the subsequent interrogations. Among other cruelties, they mention his severity to his captives, whom he kept in bondage and in prison without mercy, as a reason of the dreadful judgments executed upon him.—Belshazzar performed no exploits answerable to the lofty terms here used; and we may thence infer, that the race of kings, which centered and terminated in him, is also meant; for this is common in prophecy. Other kings had been buried according to their dignity, and lay quietly in their tombs; but he was deprived of burial, as an abominable branch from a detested stock; as the polluted raiment of those slain in battle, when, not being worth preserving, it is tumbled into the hole with their dead bodies; or as a carcase, that is trampled under foot in contempt.

19 But thou art cast out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and as the raiment of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the pit, as a carcase trodden under feet.

20 Thou shalt not be joined with them in burial, because thou hast destroyed thy land, and slain thy people: [p]the seed of evil doers shall never be renowned.

21 Prepare slaughter for his children for the iniquity of their fathers; that they do not rise, nor possess the land, nor fill the face of the world with cities.

22 For [s]I will rise up against them, saith the LORD of hosts, and cut off from Babylon [t]the name, and remnant, and son, and nephew,[4] saith the LORD.

23 I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water; and [x]I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the LORD of hosts.

24 ¶ The [y]LORD of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand;

25 That [a]I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot: [b]then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders.

26 This is [c]the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth; and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all the nations.

27 For [d]the LORD of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it? and [e]his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?

28 In [f]the year that king Ahaz died was this burden.

29 ¶ [g]Rejoice not thou, [h]whole Palestina, [i]because the rod of him that smote thee is broken; [k]for out of the serpent's root shall come forth a [$]cockatrice, and his fruit shall be [l]a fiery flying serpent.

THE [a]burden of [b]Moab. Because [c]in the night [d]Ar of Moab is laid waste, and [*]brought to silence; because in the night [e]Kir of Moab is laid waste, and brought to silence:

2 He is gone up to Bajith, and to Dibon, the high places, to weep: Moab shall howl over Nebo, and over [i]Medeba: on [k]all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off.

3 In their streets they shall gird themselves with sackcloth: on the tops of their houses,[1] and in their streets, every one shall howl, [†]weeping abundantly.

4 And Heshbon shall cry, and Elealeh; their voice shall be heard even unto [o]Jahaz: therefore the armed soldiers of Moab shall cry out; his life shall be grievous unto him.

5 [q]My heart shall cry out for Moab; [‡]his fugitives shall flee unto Zoar, an heifer of [s]three years old:[2] for by [t]the mounting up of Luhith with weeping shall they go it up; for in the way of Horonaim, they shall raise up a cry of [$]destruction.

6 For the waters of [x]Nimrim shall be [‖]desolate: for the hay[3] is withered away, [y]the grass faileth, there is no green thing.

7 Therefore the abundance they have gotten, and that which they have laid up, shall they carry away to the [*]brook of the willows.

8 For the cry is gone round about the borders of Moab; the howling thereof unto [e]Eglaim, and the howling thereof unto [d]Beer-elim.

9 For the waters of Dimon shall be full of blood: for I will bring [†]more upon Dimon, [e]lions upon him that escapeth of Moab, and upon the remnant of the land.

of the royal family of Babylon; that they might no more arise to possess the earth, and build cities to perpetuate their memory as they had done. For he would destroy both that family and their name, and Babylon also, from off the earth; yea, he would "sweep it with the besom of destruction," an expression incomparably emphatical; yet it has been fulfilled in the most extraordinary manner!—The word rendered nephew, properly signifies grandson. Belshazzar was the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar; and after his death, it may well be supposed that the posterity of that great conqueror was extirpated. And when Cyrus had taken Babylon, the waters of the Euphrates were not properly reduced to their channel; so that they gradually changed the adjacent country into a marsh, or fen, full of pools of water, and an habitation for bitterns, or other creatures which choose such situations; for the import of the original word is not certainly known. "There is no poem of its kind extant in any language, in which the subject is so well laid out, and so happily conducted, with such a richness of invention, such a variety of images, persons, and distinct actions, with such rapidity and ease of transition, and in so small a compass, as in this ode of Isaiah." [Bp. Lowth.]

SECURITY OF PALESTINE.—Ver. 24—27. The destruction of the Assyrian army in the land of Judah, and the consequent deliverance of the Jews from Sennacherib's oppression, were an earnest and pledge of the performance of the preceding prophecy.—Some think that the destruction of Gog and Magog, who shall "fall on the mountains of Israel," about the same time with the New-Testament Babylon, is also predicted, Ezek. xxxviii. xxxix. Ver. 28—32. These verses form a distinct prophecy, which probably was delivered at another time.—Uzziah had vanquished the Philistines, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7; but when he died, and the Jews were afterwards greatly enfeebled during the reign of Ahaz, and left in great difficulties at his death, the whole land of Philistia, and all connected with it rejoiced. But it was predicted that Hezekiah would be more terrible to them than Uzziah had been; as if a less destructive serpent should produce a cockatrice, or a fiery flying serpent. At that time, the very poorest of the Jews would be sustained in plenty, and live in safety; whilst the Lord would destroy the root of the Philistines' prosperity by famine, and employ Hezekiah to slay their remnant. Instead of rejoicing, therefore, howling would be more seasonable; for the whole land would be ruined: a smoke or cloud of dust from the north would give notice of the approach of the army of Judah from the north-west, to waste them; from which none would straggle or desert, when that appointed time arrived. And if any nation should send ambassadors to make peace with the Jews, or to inquire concerning their deliverances, they might answer, that "JEHOVAH himself had chosen and established Zion, as the place of his special presence and worship; in order that his people, when afflicted and distressed, might betake themselves thither for refuge; and thus putting themselves under his protection, they might be taken care of by him, though poor and destitute in themselves.' —Scott.

CHAP. XV. DOOM OF MOAB.—Ver. 1—9. The country of Moab was of small extent, but very fruitful; it bordered upon the lot of Reuben on the other side of Jordan, and upon the Dead sea. Naomi went to sojourn there, when there was a famine in Canaan. This is the country which (it is here foretold) should be wasted and grievously harassed; not quite ruined, for we find another prophecy of its ruin, Jer. xlviii., which was accomplished by Nebuchadnezzar. This prophecy here was to be fulfilled "within three years," chap. xvi. 14, and therefore was fulfilled in the devastations made of that country by the army of the Assyrians, which for many years ravaged those parts, enriching themselves with spoil and plunder. It was done either by the army of Shalmaneser, about the time of the taking of Samaria in the fourth year of Hezekiah, (as is most probable,) or by the army of Sennacherib, which, ten years after, invaded Judah.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The ungodly, when in danger or trouble, may well be alarmed and inconsolable; for they are destitute of a comforter, and of any adequate support. Yet, alas, they are but seldom induced to approach the mercy-seat of God with penitent sorrow and believing prayer: and all other endeavours to extricate themselves eventually involve them the more.—Temporal sufferings may render life grievous to such as find the thoughts of death intolerable: but some are left to seek escape from present anguish by plunging into eternal misery! How worthless then are men's idolized treasures! And how soon will every possession be torn from them, or made a burden to them! and more anguish still remaineth for impenitent sinners, after all they have suffered, till they fall into that place where is weeping and gnashing of teeth for ever. Yet our hearts should be pained for such men: they are our brethren in Adam, however inimical to us. Whilst therefore we warn them to escape from impending ruin, let us continue to pray for them; that they may seek and find forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance with the redeemed of the Lord in that kingdom which cannot be moved.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. COUNSEL TO MOAB.—Ver. 1, 2. The Moabites had paid tribute to the kings of David's race, out of their flocks, but when Judah was reduced they revolted; and the prophet seems here to call on them to send again the tributary lamb to Hezekiah, from one end of the land to the other, and "to the daughter of Zion," the place of God's worship; as a token of their submission to him, and their desire of deprecating his indigna-and seeking judgment, and °hasting righteousness.

6 ¶ We have heard of the pride of Moab, he is very proud, even of his haughtiness, and his pride, and his wrath: but his lies shall not be so.[2]

7 Therefore shall Moab howl for Moab, every one shall howl: for the foundations of ᵍKir-hareseth shall ye †mourn; surely they are stricken.

8 For the fields of Heshbon languish, and ᵘthe vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof; they are come even unto ʸJazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are ‡stretched out, they are gone over the sea:

9 Therefore I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer[3] the vine of Sibmah: I will water thee with my tears, ᵃO Heshbon, and Elealeh; ᵇfor §the shouting for thy summer-fruits, and for thy harvest, is fallen.

10 And gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting: the treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses; I have made their vintage shouting to cease.

11 Wherefore my bowels shall sound like an harp for Moab, and mine inward parts for °Kir-haresh.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass, ᶠwhen it is seen that Moab is weary on the high place, that he shall come to his sanctuary to pray; but he shall not prevail.

13 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning Moab ˡsince that time.

14 But now the LORD hath spoken, saying, Within ᵏthree years, as the years of an hireling, and ˡthe glory of Moab shall be contemned, with all that great multitude; ᵐand the remnant shall be very small and ‖feeble.

4 And in that day it shall come to pass, that the glory of ᵏJacob shall be made thin, and ˡthe fatness of his flesh shall wax lean.

5 And it shall be ᵐas when the harvestman gathereth the corn, and reapeth the ears with his arm;[2] and it shall be as he that gathereth ears in ⁿthe valley of Rephaim.

8 And he shall not look to the altars, the work of his hands, neither shall respect that which his fingers have made, either the groves or the *images.

9 ¶ In ˢthat day shall his strong cities be as a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch, which they left because of the children of Israel: and there shall be desolation.

10 Because ᵗthou hast forgotten ᵘthe God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of ˣthe Rock of thy strength, therefore ʸshalt thou plant pleasant plants, and shalt set it with strange slips:

tion, by furnishing sacrifices at his temple. For otherwise the invaders would desolate the land, and drive the daughters of Moab before them, destitute and defenceless, to pass the fords of Arnon, like birds that wander from their nest. Ver. 3—5. The Moabites were concerned to take counsel how to escape the judgments that impended over them; and, if they would be advised, let them begin by reformation, and doing justice and protecting the oppressed. Many of the Jews had been driven from their habitations, during the distractions of the preceding years: let Moab shelter them as the people of God, and conceal them from their spoilers. For though Israel had been grievously wasted, they would not always continue in that distressed condition. Their ravagers were about to be cut off; God would in mercy establish Hezekiah on the throne, and in the tabernacle, of David, as one that would tread in the steps of that prince; maintaining the truth and worship of God, impartially executing justice, seeking diligently to find out the right in every cause, and making haste to reform the nation, and promote righteousness; and then they would again prosper.—Bishop Lowth applies the counsel of the prophet to the Jews, and supposes that he exhorted them to entertain the Moabitish outcasts. But though this doubtless was a proper conduct, yet it is more likely that the exhortations were addressed to the same persons against whom the predictions were uttered. Some think that the counsel given to Moab was ironical. In the days of Ahaz, and especially after the victory of Pekah over Judah, the Jews, in great distress, perhaps sought shelter among the Moabites; but the Moabites are supposed to have repelled and betrayed them. Ver. 6. The excessive pride of the Moabites, and their indignation against God's people, were generally reported, and well known; but their deceitful designs would not prosper. Some explain the last clause thus: "His wrath is greater than his strength." His power is not equal to his vain boastings. Ver. 8—11. The vines of Sibmah seem to have been had in great repute, and to have been thence propagated in very distant regions; but the lords, or conquerors, of the nations would soon destroy them, with all other productions of the land: and then their shouting and singing for the vintage, or harvest, would utterly cease. The prospect of these calamities greatly affected the prophet; he could not refrain from weeping, and his inward commotion was such, that he compared it to the tremulous sound of a harp. Ver. 12. The king and nobles of Moab, in terror and distress, would weary themselves in sacrificing upon one high place after another, and would then resort to their sanctuary, the chief temple of their god Chemosh, but this would avail nothing to their preservation. Ver. 13, 14. The Lord had made the approaching ruin of Moab known to his prophets, some time before; but now he fixed the precise date of it; namely, after three exact years, such as hirelings serve.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. DOOM OF DAMASCUS.—Ver. 1. This prophecy must have been delivered at the time when the kings of Syria and Israel confederated against Judah. It is called "the burden of Damascus," as foretelling the desolations of that city by the Assyrians; but it was at least equally directed against Israel. Damascus was afterwards rebuilt; and, after many changes, continues to this day. It was for a season "taken away from being a city, and made a ruinous heap:" but it was not swept with the besom of destruction." Ver. 4—8. The glory and prosperity of Israel would more and more decline, like a man in a consumption; and their enemies would waste them, as the husbandman reaps the harvest, and as the gleaner after him collects the scattered ears. Yet a few individuals would be preserved; as a few grapes or olive berries are, when the rest are gathered, being situated out of the gatherer's reach. And these would renounce idolatry, and return to the worship and service of the Lord, looking to him for help, and having respect to his commandments, as the Holy One of Israel; and not to the altars erected to their idols, the work of their own hands. After the ravages of Tiglathpilezer, several of the Israelites joined themselves to the Jews in celebrating the passover, and in destroying idolatry, 2 Chr. xxx. xxxi. Afterwards many were incorporated with the Jews; (especially after the Babylonish captivity;) and finally renounced their gross idolatry. Ver. 10, 11. "The pleasant plants and shoots from a foreign soil, are allegorical expressions for strange and idolatrous worship; for vicious and abominable practices connected with it; for reliance on human aid, and alliances entered into with the neighbouring nations." [Lowth.]—The Israelites bestowed much pains about such plants; but when they expected an harvest from them, it proved a ruinous heap; and instead of rejoicing in possessing the prosperity they were thus seeking, they had intense grief and desperate sorrow as their reward. Ver. 12—14. These verses form a detached subject, and describe with great energy the march and ruin of Sennacherib's army. A woe is denounced against his numerous forces collected from many nations. Their noise, and blasphemous rage, and impetuous force, resembled the mighty waters of the sea: but when He (that is, the God of Israel) should rebuke them, they would flee like the chaff or thistle-down before the whirlwind. In the evening, Jerusalem would be in consternation and distress, because of the powerful invader; but before morning almost his whole army would be cut off, and he would flee with the rest as fast as possible.—Scott.

Ethiopia; and it may be so called on account of the ridges of mountains which shadowed it on each side: or rather because the Egyptians pretended to shadow the Jews under their protection, as "with wings," against the incursions of the Assyrians. Some, however, on apparently good ground, suppose the original word to denote a musical instrument of a remarkable form, which was peculiar to Egypt, except as others might have derived the use of it from that country.—The land was "beyond," or on each side "the rivers of Cush." The river Nile, flowing through Ethiopia and Egypt, is divided into seven streams, or rivers, before it reaches the sea.—The word translated "woe," may be merely a call on them to attend to the message of JEHOVAH. Ver. 2. The land intended was remarkable for sending ambassadors, or messengers, upon the seas and rivers, in vessels of bulrushes, or formed of the papyrus; and this was peculiar to the Egyptians, who made vessels of that plant for this purpose. To this country swift messengers were ordered to be sent; that is, the message of the Lord ought assiduously to be conveyed into every part of it; for to them it appertained. The nation is described as "scattered and peeled;" or, as it may be rendered, "stretched out and smoothed:" and this may refer to the length of the land of Egypt from north to south, being a vale on each side of the Nile, about seven hundred miles long; Ethiopia extends to a considerable length on the south of it; and the whole was smoothed, or made level by the constant inundations of the Nile. It was also "a nation terrible from their beginning hitherto," which is characteristical of Egypt: "a nation meted out, and trodden down;" alluding to the frequent admeasurement of their lands, which was rendered necessary by the inundations of the river, by which their land-marks were destroyed; and to their method of throwing the seed upon their mud, when the waters subsided, and treading it in by turning their cattle into the fields. "Whose land the rivers have spoiled," or nourished, as some think the original word may mean; and indeed it is so anomalous, that we can only conjecture from what root it is derived. Ver. 3. We suppose that this prophecy was published before, but related to, that time, when Sennacherib had routed the army of Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, and was preparing to besiege Jerusalem; intending afterwards to prosecute his advantages against Egypt and Ethiopia.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. DOOM OF EGYPT—DISUNION.—Ver. 2, 3. Not many years after the destruction of Sennacherib's army, the affairs of Egypt were reduced to the utmost confusion and anarchy, by their intestine contentions: these ended, after some years, in the tyranny of twelve princes, who divided the land amongst them; till at length Psammitichus overcame all the rest, and possessed the sole dominion for fifty-four years. Some other dreadful civil contests, which took place in Egypt, and tended to its subjection under foreign conquerors, may also be predicted: but in all these difficulties, both the courage and conduct of the people failed; and their magicians could afford them no more help than their idols did. Ver. 4. Not long after the death of Psammitichus, Nebuchadnezzar conquered Egypt; and he, and his successors, and afterwards the Persian kings, ruled over that country with despotic sway, and most grievous and cruel oppression, till the days of Alexander the Great. The word rendered lord, may more properly be translated lords; and be interpreted of all the usurpers, conquerors, and oppressors who successively tyrannized over Egypt. But some consider Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, and Belus, as the cruel lord and fierce king particularly intended, "who are both branded in history for cruel tyrants and monsters of men." [Bp. Newton.] The old translation renders it, "a mighty king." Indeed, the word admits of that meaning; and then Alexander, the powerful deliverer of Egypt from the oppression of the Persian kings, under whom and his successors the Egyptians were greatly favoured, may be pointed out: "I will shut up the Egyptians in the hands of severe lords, till a mighty king shall rule over them."—Scott.

DROUGHT.—Egypt was famous for its river Nile, which was its wealth, and strength, and beauty, and was idolized by them. Now it is here threatened, that "the waters shall fail from the sea," and the river shall be "wasted and dried up," ver. 5. Nature shall not herein favour them as she has done. Egypt was never watered with the rain of heaven, Zech. xiv. 18, and therefore the fruitfulness of their country depended wholly upon the overflowing of their river: if that therefore be dried up, their fruitful land will soon be turned into barrenness, and their harvests cease; "every thing sown by the brooks will wither" of course, will "be driven away, and be no more," ver. 7. If the paper-reeds by the brooks, at the very mouth of them, wither, much more the corn, which lies at a greater distance, but derives its moisture from them. Yet this is not all; the drying up of their rivers is the destruction, 1. Of their fortifications, for they are "brooks of defence," ver. 6, making the country difficult of access to an enemy; deep rivers are the strongest lines, and most hardly forced. Pharaoh is said to be a "great dragon lying in the midst of his rivers," and guarded by them, bidding defiance to all about him, Ezek. xxix. 3. But these "shall be emptied and dried up," not by an enemy, as Sennacherib with the "sole of his foot dried up mighty rivers," chap. xxxvii. 25; and as Cyrus, who took Babylon by drawing Euphrates into many streams, but by the providence of God, which sometimes "turns water-springs into dry ground," Ps. cvii. 33. 2. It is the destruction of their fish, which in Egypt was much of their food, witness that base reflection which the children of Israel made, Num. xi. 5, "we remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely." The drying up of the rivers will "kill the fish," Ps. cv. 29, and that will ruin those who make it their business, (1.) To catch fish, whether by angling or nets; ver. 8, they shall lament and languish, for their trade is at an end. There is nothing which the children of this world do more heartily lament, than the loss of that which they used to get money by: Ploratur lacrymis amissa pecunia veris—Those are genuine tears, which are shed over lost money. (2.) To keep fish, that it may be ready when it is called for. There were those that "made sluices and ponds for fish," ver. 10, but they shall be broken in the purposes thereof; their business will fail, either for want of water to fill their ponds, or for want of fish to replenish their waters. God can find ways to deprive a country even of that which is its staple commodity.

BLESSING PROMISED TO EGYPT.—Ver. 23—25. Israel is that third in whom Egypt and Assyria agree, and is therefore a blessing; for those are real and great blessings to their generation, who are instrumental to unite those that have been at variance. 1. They shall all be a blessing to the world: so the Christian church is made up of Jews and Gentiles; it is the beauty, riches, and support of the world. 2. They shall all be blessed of the Lord: (1.) They shall be owned by him as his. Though Egypt was formerly a house of bondage to the people of God, and Assyria an unjust invader of them, all this shall now be forgiven and forgotten, and they shall be as welcome to God as Israel. They are all alike his people, whom he takes under his protection: they are formed by him, for they are "the work of his hands;" not only as a people, but as his people. They are formed for him, for they are his inheritance, precious in his eyes, and dear to him, and from whom he has his rent of honour out of this lower world. (2.) They shall be owned together by him as jointly his; his in concert; they shall all share in one and the same blessing. Note, Those that are united in the love and blessing of God, ought, for that reason, to be united to each other in charity.—Henry.

CHAP. XX. PROPHETIC SYMBOL OF CAPTIVITY.—Ver. 2—4. As multitudes of prisoners, taken by the Assyrians, and reserved for sale as slaves, would be driven before them barefoot and uncovered, save with a short garment, that scarcely sufficed to hide their nakedness; the prophet was ordered to walk abroad in the same manner. As a mourner for the sins and miseries of his people, and as mortified to the world, he was used, it seems, to wear sackcloth constantly; but on this occasion, he was to lay that aside, and to appear exactly as the captives were exposed. This would subject him to ridicule and reproach, and be uneasy both to his body and mind; yet he promptly obeyed. It is not probable that he continued to appear in this manner for three years; but rather it was a sign of what would take place after three years; and the wonder excited by seeing the prophet walking publicly in this manner, would render his prediction the more noticed. If he once walked out thus, it might answer this end; but it is most likely he continued to do so for three days.—Sennacherib is computed by some to have been absent above three years, from the time that he first laid Hezekiah under contributions, till he came back to besiege Jerusalem. During this time he gained many advantages over the Egyptians; and, just before his return, he obtained a complete victory over Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, when, it is probable, this prediction was literally fulfilled.—Scott.

CHAP. XXI. BURDEN OF THE DESERT OF THE SEA.—Ver. 1. Babylon, and the adjacent country, is here called "the desert of the sea;" because it was shortly to become desert, and a marsh full of pools of water; as if converted into a lake, or inland sea; chap. xiv. 23; or because it stood in a large plain, which was often overflowed by the Euphrates and the Tigris. The whirlwinds in the south of Arabia often come with destructive fury; thus ruin would irresistibly come upon Babylon from Media and Persia, whose armies were very terrible; and through the deserts, which intervened between those countries and Babylon.—"The prophet renews his threatenings against Babylon, as afterwards, chap. xlvii., to convince the Jews, by the repetition, of the certainty of the event; and thereby support them under their captivity, when it should come." [Lowth.] Ver. 3—5. About a hundred years before the time, the prophet here seems to personate Belshazzar, on the night when Babylon was taken, and he was slain. We are introduced, as it were, into the banqueting room of that prince, and witness his astonishment: he declares to us his dismay, when he saw the hand that wrote, and the writing, on the wall; and how he was bowed down, when Daniel read and explained it to him; how his heart panted, and fearfulness affrighted him; and the night which he had set apart for pleasure, was thus turned into fear unto him. For whilst he had given orders to prepare the feast, and to set the watch; and whilst he and his princes ate and drank; Cyrus had commanded his captains to burnish their arms, and prepare for the assault; or Belshazzar's princes were called to arms for their riotous feasting.

BURDEN OF DUMAH.—Ver. 11, 12. This is a distinct, brief, obscure, and almost enigmatical prophecy. Dumah is Idumea, or the land of the Edomites. Some one of that nation, in vision, called to the prophet, as the watchman who waked when others slept, to inquire what time of the night it was? or what was the news of the night? This may either mean an earnest inquiry of the Edomites concerning the fate of their own country; or perhaps an insulting inquiry, concerning the duration of the afflictions of the

They do not drive these into the Eastern walls, which are too hard, if of brick; if of clay, too mouldering, but fix them in as they are building. Eliakim is considered a principal stake of this sort, for the support of all vessels destined for common or sacred uses; that is, as the principal support of the whole civil and ecclesiastical polity; the nail, mentioned ver. 25, is of course to be understood of Shebna.—CHARDIN.

Jews, in the Babylonish captivity, Ps. cxxxvii. 7. To this the watchman answered, "The morning cometh, and also the night;" this may mean, that the deliverance of the Jews would come in its appointed time; yet the day of prosperity would be succeeded by a dark night of adversity: or that, after a short continuance of approaching prosperity to the Edomites, a dreadful ruin would come on them, of which the prophet saw no end. But "if ye will inquire indeed, and ask questions in earnest; inquire of God first, ask his mercy, and afterward come again, and ye shall have a more favourable answer. [Lowth.]

BURDEN OF ARABIA.—Ver. 13—17. This is a short prophecy concerning calamities, which were coming upon the Arabians. The travelling companies of the Dedanim, a tribe of the Arabians, would shelter themselves in the forests from their hostile invaders; and let other tribes, who were not molested, meet them with provisions, that they might not perish; (it may be translated as a command;) for indeed they fled from the most imminent danger of death. These desolations were to take place in an exact year from the publishing of this prophecy; and probably it was accomplished by Sennacherib, when he first marched his army into Judah.—Scott.

CHAP. XXII. VALLEY OF VISION.—Ver. 1. The title of this prophecy is very observable; it is "the burthen of the valley of vision," of Judah and Jerusalem; so all agree. Fitly enough is Jerusalem called "a valley," for the mountains were round about it; and the land of Judah abounded with fruitful valleys. And by the judgments of God, though they had been as a towering mountain, they should be brought low, sunk, and depressed, and become dark and dirty, as a valley. But most emphatically it is called a "valley of vision," because there God was known, and his name great; there the prophets were made acquainted with his mind by visions, and there the people saw the goings of their God and King in his sanctuary. Babylon, being a stranger to God, though rich and great, was called "the desert of the sea;" but Jerusalem, being intrusted with his oracles, is "a valley of vision; blessed are their eyes, for they see," and they have seers by office among them. Where Bibles and ministers are, there is a valley of vision, from which is expected fruit accordingly; but here is a "burthen of the valley of vision," and a heavy burthen it is. Note, Church privileges, if they be not improved, will not secure men from the judgments of God; "You only have I known of all the families of the earth, therefore will I punish you." The valley of vision has a particular burthen; "Thou Capernaum," Matt. xi. 23. The higher any are lifted up in means and mercies, the heavier will their doom be if they abuse them. Now the "burthen of the valley of vision" here, is that which will not quite ruin it, but frighten it; for it refers not to the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, but to the attempt made upon it by Sennacherib, which we had the prophecy of, chap. x., and shall meet with the history of, chap. xxxvi.—Henry.

SHEBNA.—Ver. 16. It is thought that Shebna was a foreigner; that, instead of being prime minister to Hezekiah, he had no right to associate with the Jews at all, and that his connections and inclinations led him to favour their enemies. He, however, deemed himself established in authority till death; and had prepared himself a magnificent sepulchre in a lofty situation, according to the custom of monarchs; and durable, as if graven out of a rock, to perpetuate his memory and grandeur after his decease. The latter part of the verse may be more properly rendered, "O thou, that hewest out thy sepulchre on high," &c. Ver. 17—19. Notwithstanding Shebna's ostentatious confidence, his ruin was at hand. He would be degraded from his dignity; violently forced into captivity; covered with infamy, as the condemned criminal's face was covered for execution; driven from place to place, in a strange country, like a ball, when driven with great force in an open field, where no wall or fence obstructs its course; and at length he would die in misery and disgrace: whilst the remains of his magnificence would shame that family, which had preferred so ostentatious and vile a man.—Scott.

ELIAKIM.—Ver. 22. Eliakim being preferred, "all the glory of his father's house" was hung upon him; they all made their court to him, and his brethren's sheaves bowed to his. Eliakim is compared to "a nail in a sure place;" in pursuance of which comparison, all the relations of his family, which, it is likely, were numerous, and that was the glory of it, are said to have a dependence upon him: as in a house the vessels that have handles to them, are hung up on nails and pins. It intimates likewise, that he shall generously take care of them all, and bear the weight of that care; all the vessels, not only the flagons, but the cups, the vessels of small quantity, the meanest that belonged to his family, shall be provided for by him. See what a burthen they bring upon themselves, that undertake great trusts; they little think how many and how much will hang upon them, if they resolve to be faithful in the discharge of their trust. Our Lord Jesus, having the key of the house of David, is as a "nail in a sure place," and all "the glory of his father's house hangs" upon him, is derived from him, and depends upon him; even the meanest that belong to his church, are welcome to him, and he is able to bear the stress of them all. That soul cannot perish, nor that concern fall to the ground, though ever so weighty, that is by faith hung upon Christ.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. BURDEN OF TYRE.—Ver. 1. It is generally agreed that this prophecy foretells the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar. The ships and mariners, by whom the commerce between Africa and Europe in general, or Carthage and Spain in particu-sea; he shook the kingdoms: [e]the LORD hath given a commandment [l]against [*]the merchant city, to destroy the [†]strong holds thereof.

12 And he said, Thou shalt no more rejoice, O thou oppressed virgin, [h]daughter of Zidon: arise, [i]pass over to Chittim; [k]there also shalt thou have no rest.[2]

13 Behold the [l]land of the Chaldeans: this people was not, till the Assyrian founded it for them that dwell in the wilderness: they set up the towers thereof, they raised up the palaces thereof; [o]and he brought it to ruin.

14 Howl, ye ships of Tarshish: for your strength is laid waste.

15 And it shall come to pass in that day, that [q]Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years, according to the days of one king: after the end of seventy years [‡]shall Tyre sing as an harlot.

16 Take an harp, go about the city, thou harlot that hast been forgotten; make sweet melody, sing many songs, that thou mayest be remembered.

17 ¶And it shall come to pass after the end of seventy years, that the LORD will [t]visit Tyre, and she shall turn to her hire, and [x]shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world, upon the face of the earth.

18 And her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the LORD:[3] it shall not be treasured nor laid up; for her merchandise shall be for them that dwell before the LORD, to eat sufficiently, and for [§]durable clothing.

CHAP. XXIV.

The judgments of God upon the land, 1. A remnant shall joyfully praise Him, 13.

BEHOLD, the LORD []maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and []turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof.

2 And it shall be, as with the people, so with the [†]priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him.

3 The land [e]shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled; for [f]the LORD hath spoken this word.

4 The earth [g]mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away; the [‡]haughty people of the earth do languish.

5 The earth also is [h]defiled under the inhabitants thereof; [i]because they have transgressed the laws, [k]changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.

6 Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned,[1] and few men left.

7 The new wine mourneth, the vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted do sigh.

8 The mirth of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth, the joy of the harp ceaseth.

9 They shall not [q]drink wine with a song; strong drink shall be bitter to them that drink it.

10 The [r]city of confusion is broken down: every house is shut up; that no man may come in.

11 There is a crying for wine in the streets; [u]all joy is darkened, the mirth of the land is gone.

12 In [x]the city is left desolation, and the gate is smitten with destruction.

13 ¶ When thus it shall be in the midst of the land among the people, [y]there shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning grapes when the vintage is done.

14 They shall lift up their voice, they shall sing for the majesty of the LORD, they shall cry aloud from the sea.

15 Wherefore glorify ye the LORD in the [§]fires, even the name of the LORD God of Israel [b]in the isles of the sea.

16 ¶ From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous. [c]But I said, [*]My leanness, my leanness, woe unto me! [f]the treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously.

17 Fear, and the pit, and the snare,[2] are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth.

18 And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: [i]for the windows from on high are open, and [k]the foundations of the earth do shake.

19 The earth is [l]utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly.

20 The earth shall [m]reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be [n]removed like a cottage; and [o]the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; [p]and it shall fall, and not rise again.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall [†]punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth.

22 And they shall be gathered together, [‡]as prisoners are gathered in the [§]pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be [l]visited.

lar, with Tyre, was carried on, are called on to mourn and howl at her ruin.—"Tyre was one of the most famous marts in the world in those times; and the destruction of it must be a great loss to all merchants and adventurers. Every house or warehouse in Tyre is shut up." [Lowth.]—"The Tyrians, when they saw no other means of escaping, fled in their ships, and took refuge in Carthage, and in the Islands of the Egean and Ionian sea; from whence the news would soon spread, and reach Tarshish, or Tartessus." [Bp. Lowth.]—Thus the ruin of Tyre was revealed to them, (the inhabitants of Tarshish,) from the Isles of Chittim, or the countries bordering on the Mediterranean.

ZIDON.—Ver. 4. "The Zidonians, when their city was taken by the king of Ascalon, betook themselves to their ships, and landed and built Tyre." [Justin.]—Zidon therefore gloried in being the founder of Tyre, that strength of the sea, and, as it were, the sole proprietor of it: but she might now be ashamed; for her daughter complained that she was depopulated, and instead of sending colonies to other cities, she had now no children brought forth, or growing up, to replenish herself. New Tyre, indeed, continued for many ages a flourishing city; but from the time that Alexandria in Egypt was built, her trade began to decrease, and at length Tyre was utterly desolated; and there are at this day no remains of that renowned city, except a few huts for fishermen. Let us not forget that these are standing miracles, to demonstrate the divine original of the sacred Scriptures.

RESTORATION OF TYRE.—Ver. 15–18. From the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, who in some respects was the founder of the Babylonian monarchy, to the ruin of it by Cyrus, were exactly seventy years. And for a term equal to the days of this one king or kingdom, Tyre continued in obscurity and neglect. Learned men have shown that it was just seventy years from the taking of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, to the time when Darius Hystaspis, by granting some immunities to that city, made way for the recovery of its trade and prosperity. But as covetousness is idolatry, and idolatry is spiritual whoredom, the arts of this commercial city to re-establish her trade were represented by those which harlots then used to draw the attention of their lovers. For seventy years Tyre had been as a neglected harlot; but she again employed her former arts to regain her traffic, and was rendered prosperous by divine providence. But in consequence she cor- [illegible] all kingdoms with her [illegible] and luxury.—In due time the Lord intended [illegible] by Christ, [illegible] converted to Christ, would [illegible] commerce, and about which men generally [illegible] seek to find the [illegible] and [illegible] And thus she [illegible] wealth of Tyre, which had been as the hire of an harlot, would become holiness to the Lord.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. CONTENTS OF THE CHAPTER.—Ver. 1—12. Various opinions have prevailed concerning the events predicted in this chapter, which begins a new subject that is continued to the end of the twenty-seventh chapter. Some think that it is a general denunciation of vengeance from God on sinful nations and on the whole earth: and, like many other prophecies, it is couched in such terms, as may apply to many similar events, and can scarcely have its full accomplishment, except in the consummation of all things. But it seems more immediately to contain a series of prophecy, relating to the nation of Israel and to the church, which is yet fulfilling, but not accomplished. The desolation of the kingdom of Israel, by the Assyrians, and that of Judah by the Chaldeans; and the ravages afterwards committed by Antiochus Epiphanes, may be adverted to; but the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the dispersion of the Jews into all nations, with those events connected with, and resulting from, that awful dispensation, seem principally intended; till the close of the chapter, when a transition appears to be made to other important matters.—Scott.

GLORY TO GOD IN ALL THINGS.—Ver. 23. When the proud enemies of God's church are humbled and brought down, 1. Then it shall appear, beyond contradiction, that the Lord reigns; which is always true, but not always alike evident. When the kings of the earth are punished for their tyranny and oppression, then it is proclaimed and proved to all the world, that God is King of kings, King above them, by whom they are conquerable, King over them, to whom they are accountable; that he reigns as Lord of hosts, of all hosts, of their hosts; that he reigns in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem; in his church, for the honour and welfare of that, pursuant to the promises on which that is founded, reigns in his word and ordinances; that he reigns before his ancients, before all his saints, especially before his ministers, the elders of his church, who have their eye upon all the outgoings of his power and providence, and, in all these events, observe his hand. God's ancients, the old disciples, the [illegible] Christians, that have often, when they have been perplexed, gone into [illegible] God in Zion and Jerusalem, and acquainted themselves with his [illegible] there, they shall see more [illegible] of God's dominion and [illegible] tions of his [illegible] shall appear [illegible] glo[illegible]

The prophet praiseth God for his judgments, 1, for his saving benefits, 6, and for his victorious salvation, 9.

O LORD, [a]thou art my God; I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name: for thou hast done wonderful things; thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth.

2 For thou hast made of a city an heap;[1] of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

4 For [g]thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, [h]a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

5 Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

6 ¶ And [n]in this mountain shall the LORD of hosts [o]make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees; of fat things full of marrow, [q]of wines on the lees well refined.

7 And [r]he will [*]destroy in this mountain[2] the face of the covering [†]cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations.

8 He will [s]swallow up death in victory; and the [t]Lord GOD will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the LORD hath spoken it.

9 ¶ And it shall be said in that day, [y]Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the LORD; we have waited for him, [z]we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.

10 For [a]in this mountain shall the hand of the LORD rest, and Moab shall be [‡]trodden down[3] under him, even as straw is [§]trodden down for the dunghill.

11 And he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim; and he shall bring down their pride together with the spoils of their hands.

12 And the fortress of the high fort of thy walls shall he bring down, lay low, and bring to the ground, even to the dust.

IN that day shall [b]this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city: [d]salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

2 [e]Open ye the gates, that the [f]righteous nation which keepeth the [*]truth may enter in.

3 Thou wilt keep him [†]in perfect peace,[1] whose [‡]mind is [h]stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee.

6 The foot shall tread it down, even the feet of the poor, and the steps of the needy.

7 The [p]way of the just is uprightness: thou, most upright, dost weigh the path of the just.

8 Yea, [r]in the way of thy judgments, O LORD, have we waited for thee; [t]the desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee.

9 With my soul [u]have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early: [y]for when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.

sun and moon, shall be ashamed when God appears above them, much more when he appears against them: then shall "their faces be filled with shame," that they may seek God's name. The eastern nations worshipped the sun and moon; but when God shall appear so gloriously for his people against his and their enemies, all these pretended deities shall be ashamed that ever they received the homage of their deluded worshippers. The glory of the Creator infinitely outshines the glory of the brightest creatures. In the great day, when the Judge of heaven and earth shall shine forth in his glory, "the sun shall," by his transcendent lustre, "be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood."—Henry.

CHAP. XXV. SPIRITUAL BANQUET.—Ver. 6. If we suppose (as many do) that this refers to the great joy that should be in Zion and Jerusalem, either when the army of the Assyrians was routed by an angel, or when the Jews were released out of their captivity in Babylon, or upon occasion of some other equally surprising deliverance; yet we cannot avoid making it to look further, to the grace of the gospel, and the glory which is the crown and consummation of that grace; for it is at our resurrection through Christ that the saying here written shall be brought to pass; then, and not till then, (if we may believe St. Paul,) it shall have its full accomplishment; "death is swallowed up in victory," 1 Cor. xv. 54. This is a key to the rest of the promises here connected together. And so we have here a prophecy of the salvation and the grace brought unto us by Jesus Christ, in which "the prophets inquired, and searched diligently," 1 Pet. i. 10. The grace of the gospel is a royal feast for all people; not like that of Ahasuerus, which was intended only to show the grandeur of the master of the feast; Esther i. 4; for this is intended to gratify the guests, and, therefore, whereas all there was for show, all here is for substance. The preparations made in the gospel for the kind reception of penitents and supplicants with God, are often, in the New Testament, set forth by the similitude of a feast; as Matt. xxii. 1, &c., which seems to be borrowed from this here. 1. God himself is the Master of the feast, and, we may be sure, he prepares like himself, as becomes him to give, rather than as becomes us to receive. The Lord of hosts makes this feast. 2. The guests invited are, all people, Gentiles as well as Jews. "Go preach the gospel to every creature." There is enough for all, and whoever will, may come, and take freely, even those that are gathered out of the highways, and the hedges. 3. The place is mount Zion; thence the preaching of the gospel takes rise, the preachers must begin at Jerusalem. 4. The provision is very rich, and every thing is of the best; it is a feast which supposes abundance and variety; it is a continual feast to believers, it is their own fault if it be not. It is a "feast of fat things and full of marrow;" so relishing, so nourishing, are the comforts of the gospel to all those that feast upon them, and digest them. The returning prodigal was entertained with the fatted calf; and David has that pleasure in communion with God, with which his soul is satisfied as with marrow and fatness. It is a feast of "wines on the lees;" the strongest-bodied wines, that have been kept long upon the lees, and then are well refined from them, so that they are clear and fine.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVI. STABILITY OF THE CHURCH.—Ver. 1. "We have a strong city;" it is a city incorporated by the charter of the everlasting covenant, fitted for the reception of all that are made free by that charter, for their employment and entertainment; it is a strong city, as Jerusalem was, while it was a city compact together, and had God himself a Wall of fire round about it; so strong, that none would have believed that an enemy could ever "have entered into the gates of Jerusalem," Lam. iv. 12. The church is a strong city, for it has walls and bulwarks, or counterscarps, and those of God's own appointing; for he has, in his promise, appointed salvation itself to be its defence. Those that are designed for salvation will find that to be their protection, 1 Pet. i. 4. It is also richly replenished with those that are good, and they are instead of fortifications to it; for the inhabitants of Jerusalem, if they are such as they should be, are its strength, Zech. xii. 5. The gates are here ordered to be opened, "that the righteous nation, which keeps the truth, may enter in;" ver. 2, they had been banished and driven out by the iniquity of the former times, but now the laws that were made against them are repealed, and they have liberty to enter in again. Or, there is an act for a general naturalization of all the righteous, whatever nation they are of, encouraging them to come, and settle in Jerusalem.

PEACE.—Ver. 3. "Thou wilt keep him in peace," in "perfect peace," inward peace, outward peace, peace with God, peace of conscience, peace at all times, under all events; this peace shall he be put into, and kept in the possession of, whose mind is stayed upon God, because he trusts in him. It is the character of every good man, that he trusts in God; puts himself under his guidance and government, and depends upon him, that it shall be greatly to his advantage to do so. They that trust in God must have their minds stayed upon him; must trust him at all times, under all events, must firmly and faithfully adhere to him, with an entire satisfaction in him. Such as do so, God will keep in perpetual peace, and that peace shall keep them. When evil tidings are abroad, they shall calmly expect the event, and not be disturbed by frightful apprehensions arising from them, whose hearts are "fixed, trusting in the Lord," Ps. cxii. 7.—Henry.

18 We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind; we have not wrought any deliverance in the earth; neither have [y]the inhabitants of the world fallen.

19 Thy [z]dead men shall live, together with [a]my dead body shall they arise.[3] Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs,[4] and the earth shall cast out the dead.

The care of God over his vineyard, 1. His chastisements differ from judgments, 7. The church of Jews and Gentiles, 12.

IN [a]that day the LORD, [b]with his sore, and great, and strong sword, shall punish [c]leviathan the *piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea.

2 ¶ In that day [g]sing ye unto her, [h]A vineyard of red wine.[1]

4 [m]Fury is not in me: who would set the briers and thorns against me in battle? I would go †through them, I would burn them together.

5 Or let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me; and he shall make peace with me.

6 He shall [q]cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom, and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

7 ¶ Hath [r]he smitten him, ‡as he smote those that smote him? or is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him?

8 In measure, when [s]it shooteth forth, thou wilt debate with it: [t]he stayeth his rough wind in the day of the east wind.

9 By this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this is all the fruit to take away his sin; when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk-stones that are beaten in sunder, the groves and *images shall not stand up.

10 Yet [a]the defenced city[2] shall be desolate, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness: there shall the calf feed, and there shall he lie down, and consume the branches thereof.

11 When the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: the women come, and set them on fire: [d]for it is a people of no understanding: [e]therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will shew them no favour.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that [h]the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, [l]and shall worship the LORD in the holy mount of Jerusalem.

3 The crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim, shall be trodden †under feet:

6 And [m]for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gate.

7 ¶ But they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment.

tion elsewhere predicted, Rev. xx. 4; the flourishing of the church, that had seemed dead through the corruptions of popery, and the prevalence of infidelity, seem here especially foretold. We may consider Christ himself as the speaker, and addressing the church: his resurrection from the dead was the earnest of all the future deliverances that were predicted: and they are the continuation of that power which was then exerted.—But the church is generally considered as addressing God. Her cause is his also; they who have been put to death for his righteousness' sake are his dead men, and shall live: he will recover her, as a dead body laid in the grave is miraculously raised to life again; by fully restoring her prosperity. For the power of his grace, (like the dew or rain that cause the herbs that seem dead to revive,) would be effectual to raise her from the lowest state of depression. "The Hebrew runs thus: 'My dead body shall arise.' The noun is singular; the verb is plural. The two sentences are equivalent; they are called the church's dead, as members of that mystical body; and Christ's dead, from the interest he hath in them, and because he hath promised to raise them up at the last day." [Lowth.]—In this figurative resurrection the deceased saints arise, but not the deceased persecutors. The last clause may be rendered, "the land of tyrants shalt thou cause to fall," or, shall she cause to fall; that is, the church shall prevail against all oppressors, and cast them down.

WARNING.—Ver. 20, 21. The Lord, by his prophet, exhorts his people, through successive ages, when under persecutions, to wait with cheerful expectation for these glorious events. Let them retire from the world, and, by faith and prayer, take refuge in him, and patiently wait the event. Thus, as Noah in the ark, as the Israelites in Egypt eating the passover, or as one sheltered in a secret chamber, they would be safe and uninterrupted amid the heaviest storms; and in a very little time, the vindictive wrath of their enemies, and the corrections of their Father, would terminate. For the Lord was about to remove from his mercy-seat, (his place in Israel,) to the righteous tribunal, in order to pass sentence and inflict punishment on the wicked; but especially upon the murderers of his people: and then the immense quantities of blood that had been shed in war, persecution, and oppression, would be disclosed, and the murderers receive condign punishment.—Scott.

seems more immediately predicted. From the repetition of the word "leviathan," it appears not improbable, that more than one terrible animal was called by that name; and the word rendered "dragon" is translated elsewhere sea-monster. Many people and nations are meant by "the sea;" and Satan, the old dragon, gave his power to the beast, which the apostle saw rise out of the sea. This great enemy of God and his church is the most terrible and destructive of creatures. Immense subtlety, malice, and power, unite in him. He has long fatally deceived all the nations of the earth, except the remnant, "whose names are written in the book of life, of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world;" Rev. xii. 9, xiii. 8; so that he hath dwelt among them and reigned over them as the god and prince: and his chief seat, as spoken of in these prophecies, has long been fixed in that great city, which, one way or other, has always affected to rule over the nations. "He prophesieth here of the destruction of Satan and his kingdom, under the name of Leviathan." But God will at length make the sword of his almighty vengeance, which is exceedingly sharp, and great, and strong, to reach unto him. Then the old serpent will be bound, and cast into the bottomless pit; his power will cease, his obstinate servants will be cut off, and the earth be overspread with truth and righteousness.

ASSYRIA.—Ver. 12, 13. These verses predict the restoration of the Jews after the captivity; and under that typical event, their recovery from their present dispersion. At Cyrus's proclamation, they, "whose hearts the Lord stirred up," "from the channel of the river Euphrates, to the river of Egypt," (that is, from all the different places, in which they were scattered,) were gathered one by one, as fruit is beat off from the tree; and thus they, who had been in the most abject servitude, in the land of Assyria or Chaldea, and the poorest of them especially, with many of those of the ten tribes, and some of the outcasts who had taken refuge in Egypt, returned to rebuild the temple, and worship God at Jerusalem. But the preaching of the gospel seems especially to be intended by the "blowing of the great trumpet." By this, the Lord will collect the abject, and outcast Jews, from their present dispersions, into his church, number them with his accepted worshippers, and probably reinstate them in their own land.—Scott.

8 For all tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean.

9 ¶ Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand [f]doctrine? them that are [g]weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts.

10 For precept [h]must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little:

11 For with [i]stammering lips, and another tongue, [k]will he speak to this people.

12 To whom he said, [l]This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: [m]yet they would not hear.

13 But the word of the LORD was unto them [n]precept upon precept, precept upon precept;[3] line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken.

14 ¶ Wherefore hear the word of the LORD, ye scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem:

15 Because ye have said, [o]We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us: for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves:

16 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [p]Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: [q]he that believeth shall not make haste.[4]

17 ¶ [r]Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: [s]and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, [t]and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place.

18 And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be [u]trodden down by it.

19 From the time that it goeth forth it shall take you: for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night: and it shall be a vexation only [v]to understand the report.

20 For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it;[5] and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself [w]in it.

21 For the LORD shall rise up as [x]in mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in [y]the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, [z]his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act.

22 Now therefore [a]be ye not mockers, [b]lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord GOD of hosts [c]a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.

23 ¶ Give ye ear, and hear my voice; hearken, and hear my speech.

24 Doth the plowman plow all day to sow? doth he open and break the clods of his ground?

25 When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches,[6] and scatter the cummin, and cast [d]in the principal wheat, and the appointed barley, and the [e]rye in their [f]place?

26 [g]For his God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him.

27 For the fitches are not threshed with a threshing instrument,[7] neither is a cart wheel turned about upon the cummin; but the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod.

28 Bread-corn is bruised; because he will not ever be threshing it, nor break it with [h]the wheel of his cart, nor bruise it with his horsemen.

29 This also [i]cometh forth from the LORD of hosts, which is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working.

2 Yet [5]I will distress Ariel, and there shall be heaviness and sorrow: [6]and it shall be unto me as Ariel.

3 And I will [7]camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee.

4 And [8]thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar spirit out of the ground,[2] and thy speech shall [9]whisper out of the dust.

It was not for them to drink wine, Prov. xxxi. 4. The prophets were a kind of Nazarites, (as appears by Amos ii. 11,) and, as reprovers by office, were concerned to keep at the utmost distance from the sins they reproved in others; yet there were many of them ensnared in this sin. What! a priest, a prophet, a minister, and yet drunk! Tell it not in Gath. Such a scandal are they to their coat. 2. That the consequences of it were very pernicious, not only by the ill influence of their example, but the prophet, when he was drunk, erred in vision; the false prophets plainly discovered themselves to be so, when they were in drink. The priest "stumbled in judgment and forgat the law," Prov. xxxi. 5: he reeled and staggered as much in the operations of his mind, as in the motions of his body. What wisdom, or justice, can be expected from those that sacrifice reason, and virtue, and conscience, and all that is valuable, to such a base lust as the love of strong drink is? Happy art thou, O land, when "thy princes eat and" drink "for strength, and not for drunkenness!" Eccl. x. 17. 3. That the disease was epidemical, and the generality of those that kept any thing of a table, were infected with it; "all tables are full of vomit," ver. 8. See what an odious thing the sin of drunkenness is, what an affront it is to human society; it is rude and ill-mannered, enough to sicken the beholders; for the tables where they eat their meat are filthily stained with the marks of this sin, which the sinners declare as Sodom; their tables are full of vomit. So that the victor, instead of being proud of his crown, ought rather to be ashamed of it. It bodes ill to any people, when so sottish a sin as drunkenness is, is become national.—Henry.

NATIONAL IGNORANCE.—Ver. 9—11. The pious king of Judah, Isaiah, and other prophets, were very desirous of instructing the people: but they were so hardened in vice, and so early initiated into it, that there were scarcely any who would give them a hearing; except they could teach the infants that were hanging upon their mothers' breasts. Or the people were so intent upon their pleasures, that they must be torn from them to receive instruction, as the infant from the breast; and they would no more understand what was taught them than children. It was also necessary to use much repetition, to dwell long upon every topic, and to teach the people a little on one occasion, and a little on another, as they were able to bear it, because of their ignorance and unteachableness. But this disgusted many of them, who seem to have turned the instructions of the prophets into ridicule; and having catched up some detached expressions, such as these here used, and which have a remarkable alliteration in the original; they contemptuously mimicked their language and manner, and entertained one another by [illegible] them off.—Therefore the Lord determined to teach them by the Assyrians and Chaldeans, who might indeed stammer out insults and menaces in the Hebrew tongue, but would in other things speak a language which they could not understand; for he would use these strangers to scourge such as refused to hear his word.—Scott.

CHOICE CORNER-STONE.—Ver. 16. "Behold, I lay in Zion, for a foundation, a stone." This foundation is, 1. The promises of God in general; his word, upon which he has caused his people to hope; his covenant with Abraham that he would be a God to him and his: this is a foundation, a foundation of stone, firm and lasting, for faith to build upon; it is a tried stone, for all the saints have stayed themselves upon it, and it never failed them. 2. The promise of Christ in particular, for to him this is expressly applied in the New Testament, 1 Pet. ii. 6—8. He is that Stone which is become "the Head of the corner." The great promise of the Messiah and his kingdom, which was to be fulfilled at Jerusalem, was sufficient to make God's people easy in the worst of times; for they knew well that till he was come, "the sceptre should not depart from Judah." Zion shall continue while this Foundation is yet to be laid there. "Thus saith the Lord Jehovah," for the comfort of those that dare not "make lies their refuge;" "Behold, and look upon me, as one that has undertaken to 'lay in Zion a Stone.'" Jesus Christ is a Foundation of God's laying; "this is the Lord's doing." He is laid in Zion, in the church, in the holy hill. He is a tried Stone; a trying Stone, so some; a Touch-stone that shall distinguish betwixt true and counterfeit. He is a precious Stone, for such are the "foundations" of the "New Jerusalem," Rev. xxi. 19; a Corner-stone, in whom the sides of the building are united; the "Head-stone of the corner."—Henry.

DIVINE WISDOM SYMBOLIZED.—Ver. 23—29. The dealings of God with Israel and Judah, and with different descriptions of men, are here illustrated by apt similitudes, to which the prophet demanded their earnest attention. The ploughman varies his work as the case requires, not ploughing every day: he prepares the ground for the seed, and sows it with different kinds of pulse or grain, each in its appointed spot, the wheat in the principal place, as being most valuable. And when he hath gathered in his harvest, he knows how to separate the corn from the straw and the chaff, according to the methods of the time and place in which he lives; and to the nature of the grain, that he may not injure it, but prepare it for his use. Thus the Lord, who hath given man this wisdom and discretion, must himself be wonderful in counsel and excellent in operation. As the season and occasion requires, he threatens, corrects, spares, saves money, or executes vengeance. He distinguishes between one character and another with the greatest exactness; and orders every thing according to the counsel of his own will, and for his own glory.—Scott.

drinketh; but he awaketh, and, [o]behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion.

9 ¶ Stay yourselves, and wonder; [l]cry ye out, and cry: [q]they are drunken, but not with wine; [4]they stagger, but not with strong drink.

10 For [r]the LORD hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your [*]rulers, the seers hath he covered.

11 And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a [†]book [u]that is sealed, [5] which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, [x]I cannot; for it is sealed:

12 And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, [y]I am not learned.

13 ¶ Wherefore the LORD said, [z]Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me, and [a]their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

14 Therefore, behold, I will [‡]proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, [6] and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

15 Woe unto them that [d]seek deep to hide their counsel from the LORD, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?

16 Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? [1]or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?

17 ¶ Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest? [7]

18 And in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness.

19 The [o]meek also shall [§]increase their joy in the LORD, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

20 For the terrible one is brought to nought, and [s]the scorner is consumed, [t]and all that watch for iniquity are cut off:

21 That make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of nought.

22 Therefore thus saith the LORD, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, [a]Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.

23 But when he seeth his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall [d]fear the God of Israel.

24 They also that erred in spirit shall [l]come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine.

The people threatened for their confidence in Egypt, 1, and contempt of God's word, 8.

WOE to the rebellious children, saith the LORD, that take counsel, but not of me; and that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may [d]add sin to sin:

2 That walk to go down into Egypt, [f]and have not asked at my mouth; to strengthen themselves in the strength of Pharaoh, and to trust in [g]the shadow of Egypt!

3 Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt [l]your confusion.

4 For his princes were at [l]Zoan, and his ambassadors came to [m]Hanes. [1]

5 They were all ashamed [2] of a people that could not profit them, nor be an help nor profit, but a shame, and also a reproach.

6 The burden of the beasts of the south: [q]into the land of trouble and anguish, from whence come the young and old lion, the viper and fiery flying serpent, they will carry their riches upon the shoulders of young asses, and their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them.

7 For the Egyptians shall help in vain, and to no purpose: therefore have I cried [*]concerning this, Their strength is to sit still.

8 ¶ Now go, write it before them in a table, and note it in a book, that it may be for [†]the time to come for ever and ever;

9 That [y]this is a rebellious people, [z]lying children, children that [a]will not hear the law of the LORD:

10 Which say to the seers, See not; and to the prophets, Prophesy not unto us right things, [3] [c]speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits:

11 Get you out of the way, turn aside out of the path, cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us.

12 Wherefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel, Because ye despise this word, and trust in [‡]oppression and perverseness, and stay thereon:

lion of God: and some think that it refers to the standard of Judah, which was a lion, or to Christ, the Lion of that tribe, or the strength of the city. But probably it relates to the altar of burnt-offering, which consumed the sacrifices as a lion devours his prey. Perhaps the Jews sometimes called the city by this name, and trusted that it would prevail against every assailant, because of the sacrifices there offered. But though David had taken it from the Jebusites, fixed his residence there, and removed the ark of the covenant thither, yet God denounced a woe against it. And though the people continued from year to year to observe their solemn feasts, and to multiply their sacrifices, yet the Lord would surely distress the city, and fill it with trouble and sorrow; and it should be unto him as Ariel. As the altar, flaming with the sacred fire, consuming the oblations, and surrounded with the blood and carcases of the sacrifices, was a discovery of divine justice in the punishment of sin; so should Jerusalem be, when filled with slain men and consumed by fire.—This doth not allow us to interpret this chapter exclusively of Sennacherib's invasion. He distressed Jerusalem, but did not render her like the altar of burnt-offering.—"The hearth of the altar, which Ezekiel plainly calls by the same name," Ezek. xliii. 15, 16.—"Go on year after year, keep your solemn feasts; yet know that God will punish you for your hypocritical worship."—"It shall be all on flame, as it was when taken by the Chaldeans; or covered with carcases and blood, as when taken by the Romans; an intimation of which more distant events, though not the immediate subject of the prophecy, may perhaps be given in this obscure passage." [Bp. Lowth.]

NATIONAL INFATUATION.—Ver. 9—12. The Jews are here called upon to pause, reflect, be amazed, and cry out as in bitter anguish, on account of the judgments that were coming on the nation. They were, and would be, intoxicated with presumption and false doctrine, and rendered insensible to their danger; and the Lord would make them drink of the cup of his indignation, till they staggered as drunken men. Because they despised his word and rejected his salvation, he had poured upon them the spirit of deep sleep, and given them up to judicial blindness; and especially their prophets, rulers, and teachers of every kind were covered with darkness, as if hoodwinked; so that the visions or prophecies which were sent them, though plain enough in themselves, were utterly inexplicable to them. Their learned men, when asked to interpret them, being blinded by their prejudices and passions, excused themselves on account of the book being sealed; intimating that the predictions were so enveloped in obscurity, that, if there were any meaning in them, it could not be discovered. And the poor alleged their want of learning as the reason of their contempt and inattention; so that in fact the oracles of God became of no use to them. The apostle applies this to the state of the Jews in his days. And doubtless it had its principal accomplishment, when the chief priests, scribes, pharisees, and Jewish nation, rejected and crucified their promised and long-expected Messiah, and persecuted his apostles and disciples; and in the state of that nation to this present day.

LIGHT AND SHADOW.—Ver. 17—19. These verses seem wholly to relate to the rejection of the Jewish nation, and the calling of the Gentiles. In a little time, Lebanon would become Carmel; the uncultivated forest would be a fruitful field: that is, the neglected Gentile nations would be favoured with the good seed of the word of God, and yield a plentiful harvest of true converts: at the same time, the field, which had long been tilled and yielded fruit, would be esteemed a forest; that is, the nation of the Jews would be rejected, and left without the means of grace, to become barren and desert. Then they who before were deaf to the voice of God, would hear and understand the words of that book, which was sealed up from the unbelieving Jews; and the poor blind heathens, emerging from their obscurity and darkness, would enjoy the marvellous light of the gospel. Perhaps the miracles of Christ and his apostles also might be alluded to. Then the teachable, the meek, and poor in spirit, and the poor and afflicted of this world, would rejoice more abundantly in the Lord, because of the wretched condition from which they had been delivered; nay, would be more joyful than believing Jews had in general been.

EFFECT OF GOD'S GRACE.—Ver. 22—24. God did not intend to reject all the posterity of Abraham and Jacob, that these redeemed servants of God should be as it were ashamed and wax pale. The Jews, who embraced Christianity, would acknowledge the converted Gentiles, as the work of God's new-creating grace, and as their spiritual children: and their believing descendants would be excited to trust, honour, and worship the holy One of Jacob, with greater fervency, for this vast accession to the church. Multitudes even of these Jews who had erred in spirit, and murmured against Christ, and malignantly opposed his gospel, would at length come to a better temper, and understand and receive his doctrine; nay, at length, the whole Jewish nation will be converted to Christ, and readmitted into the church.—Scott.

CHAP. XXX. FOLLY OF TRUSTING IN EGYPT.—Ver. 4—5. 1. The Egyptians would receive the ambassadors of Israel, would speak kindly to them, and be willing to treat with them. "His princes were at Zoan," at Pharaoh's court there, and had their audience of the king, who encouraged them to depend upon his friendship, and the succours he would send them. But, 2. They would not answer their expectation, they could not profit them, ver. 5. For God says, "They shall not profit them," ver. 6, and high wall, whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant.

14 And he shall break it as the breaking of [s]the potter's vessel that is broken in pieces; he shall not spare: so that there shall not be found in the bursting of it a sherd to take fire [z]from the hearth, or to take water withal out of the pit.

15 For thus saith the Lord GOD, [a]the Holy One of Israel, In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength; and ye would not.

16 But ye said, No; [q]for we will flee upon horses; therefore shall ye flee: and, We will ride upon the swift; [r]therefore shall they that pursue you be swift.

17 One thousand shall flee at the rebuke of one; at the rebuke of five shall ye flee: [t]till ye be left as [l]a beacon upon the top of a mountain, and as an ensign on an hill.

18 ¶ And [u]therefore will the LORD wait, that he may be gracious unto you; and therefore [y]will he be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you: [z]for the LORD is a God of judgment: [a]blessed are all they that wait for him.

19 For the people shall [b]dwell in Zion at Jerusalem; thou shalt weep no more: [d]he will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee.

20 And though the LORD give you [e]the bread of adversity, and the water of [*]affliction, yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers:

21 And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, [h]when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left.

22 Ye shall defile also the covering of [†]thy graven images of silver, and the ornament of thy molten images of gold: thou shalt [‡]cast them away as a menstruous cloth; thou shalt say unto it, Get thee hence.

23 Then shall he give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground withal; and bread of the increase of the earth, and [n]it shall be fat and plenteous; in that day shall [o]thy cattle feed in large pastures.

24 The [p]oxen likewise, and the young asses that ear the ground,[3] shall eat [§]clean provender, which hath been winnowed with the shovel and with the fan.

25 And there shall be upon every high mountain, and upon every [‖]high hill, rivers and streams of waters, in the day of the great slaughter, when the towers fall.

26 Moreover, the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the LORD [x]bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the stroke of their wound.

27 ¶ Behold, the name of the LORD cometh from far, [y]burning with his anger, and [*]the burden thereof is [†]heavy: his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire:

28 And his breath, as an overflowing stream, shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations[4] with the sieve of vanity: and there shall be [c]a bridle in the jaws of the people, [d]causing them to err.

29 Ye shall have a song, as in the night, when a holy solemnity is kept; and gladness of heart, as when one goeth with a pipe to come into the mountain of the LORD, to the [‡]mighty One of Israel.

30 And [h]the LORD shall [§]cause his glorious voice to be heard, and shall shew [i]the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger, and with [k]the flame of a devouring fire, with scattering, and tempest, and hailstones.

31 For through [l]the voice of the LORD shall the Assyrian be beaten down, which smote with a rod.

32 And in [‖]every place where the grounded staff shall pass, which the LORD shall [*]lay upon him, it shall be with tabrets and harps:[5] and in battles of [c]shaking will he fight [†]with it.

33 For [p]Tophet is ordained [‡]of old; yea, for the king it is prepared: he hath made it deep and large; the pile thereof is fire and much wood; [s]the breath of the LORD, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it.

The prophet sheweth the cursed folly in trusting to Egypt, and forsaking of God.

WOE to them that go down to Egypt for help; and stay on horses, and trust in chariots, because they are many; and in horsemen, because they are very strong: but [c]they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, [d]neither seek the LORD!

2 Yet [e]he also is wise, and [f]will bring evil, and will not [*]call back his words: but will [h]arise against the house of the evildoers, and [l]against the help of them that work iniquity.

3 Now the Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horses flesh, and not spirit. When the LORD shall stretch out his hand, both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together.

every creature is that to us, (and no more,) which he makes it to be. Either the forces they were to furnish them with could not be raised in time, or, when they were raised, they were not fit for service, and they would not venture any of their veteran troops in the expedition; or the march was so long, that they could not come up when they had occasion for them; or the Egyptians would not be cordial to Israel, but would secretly incline to the Assyrians, upon some account or other; "The Egyptians shall help in vain, and to no purpose," ver. 7. They shall hinder and hurt, instead of helping. And therefore, 3. These people, that were now so fond of the Egyptians, would at length be ashamed of them, and of all their expectations from them and confidence in them, ver. 3, "'The strength of Pharaoh,' which was your pride, 'shall be your shame;' all your neighbours will upbraid you, and you will upbraid yourselves, with your folly in trusting to it. And the 'shadow of Egypt,' that 'land shadowing with wings,' chap. xviii. 1, that was for your confidence, shall be your confusion; it will not only disappoint you, and be the matter of your shame, but it will weaken all your other supports, and be an occasion of mischief to you." God afterward threatens the ruin of Egypt for this very thing, because they had dealt treacherously with Israel, and been a staff of a reed to them, Ezek. xxix. 6, 7. The princes and ambassadors of Israel, that were so forward to court an alliance with them, when they come among them, shall see so much of their weakness, or rather of their baseness, "that they shall all be ashamed of a people that could not be a help or profit to them," but a "shame and reproach," ver. 5. Those that trust in God, and in his power, providence, and promise, are never made ashamed of their hope; but they that put confidence in any creature will, sooner or later, find it a reproach to them. God is true, and may be trusted; but every man a liar, and must be suspected.—Henry.

BLESSING OF ABUNDANT TEACHERS.—Ver. 20, 21. It is here predicted, that in the midst of poverty and affliction, the Lord would afford the people abundance of good instruction and faithful public teachers, who should not be removed into corners by persecuting princes: so that the people would continually be directed in the right way, and exhorted to walk in it, and cautioned on every occasion not to decline from it on the right hand or on the left. During the reign of Hezekiah, the people had much good instruction; but it could hardly be said that they had "the bread of adversity, and the water of affliction:" and after his death, persecuting Manasseh soon drove their faithful teachers into corners. But after the captivity, the Jews continued long in a very poor and destitute condition: yet the Lord sent them many able teachers, especially those that came up with Ezra, and were trained up under him. The Priests, Levites, and Scribes, were then protected in their work; synagogues were everywhere erected, and the people were more generally instructed from the law and the prophets, than in preceding times. And though Antiochus Epiphanes (and others in some degree) persecuted them, yet the people were duly instructed; and after prophecy ceased, the public teaching from the law and the prophets, in all their synagogues, continued without interruption till the coming of Christ: and though it became greatly corrupted by the glosses and traditions of the Scribes and Pharisees, yet it was not utterly without effect.

REVIVAL AND BLESSING.—Ver. 26. This verse must be explained as an emblematical prediction of spiritual blessings; and nothing previous to the coming of Christ can well be considered as in any respect a fulfilment of it. But then the church, "fair as the moon," shining by the reflected beams of "the Sun of righteousness," began more to resemble him. The Sun, now above the horizon, shone with sevenfold light, diffusing more abundantly and extensively knowledge, holiness, and comfort, on mankind; and the Lord began to heal the breaches of the preceding ages. But when at length the church shall be purified from heresy, superstition, and every corruption; when her divisions shall be healed, every scandal removed, and every part replenished with truth, and holiness, and joy; when the Jews shall be converted, the fulness of the Gentiles brought in, all persecution terminated, and the great deceiver cast into the bottomless pit; then this prophecy will receive its entire accomplishment, and not before. The millennium, and not the heavenly state, seems to be predicted.—Scott.

TOPHET.—Ver. 33. The valley of the son of Hinnom, adjoining to Jerusalem, was called Tophet; in that valley, it is supposed, many of the Assyrian regiments lay encamped, and were there slain by the destroying angel; or there the bodies of those that were so slain were burned. Hezekiah had "lately, and from yesterday," (so the word is,) ordained it; that is, say some, he had ridded it of the images that were set up in it, to which they there burnt their children, and so prepared it to be a receptacle for the dead bodies of their enemies; for the king of Assyria, for his army, it is prepared, and there is fuel enough ready to burn them all; and they shall be consumed as suddenly and effectually as if the fire were kept burning by a continual stream of brimstone, for such the breath of the Lord, his word and his wrath, will be to it. Now as the prophet, in the foregoing promises, slides insensibly into the promises of gospel-graces and comforts, so here, in the threatening of the ruin of Sennacherib's army, he points at the final and everlasting destruction of all impenitent sinners. Our Saviour calls the future misery of the damned, Gehenna, in allusion to the valley of Hinnom, which gives some countenance to the applying of this to that misery, as also that in the Apocalypse, that is so often called the "lake that burns with fire and brimstone." This is said to be prepared of old for the Devil and his angels, for the greatest of sinners, the 9 ¶ Rise up, ye women[1] that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech.

10 [*]Many days and years shall ye be troubled, ye careless women: [y]for the vintage shall fail, the gathering shall not come.

11 Tremble, ye women that are at ease; be troubled, ye careless ones; [a]strip you, and make you bare, [b]and gird sackcloth upon your loins.

12 They shall [c]lament for the teats, for the [†]pleasant fields, for the fruitful vine.

13 Upon the land of my people shall [d]come up thorns and briers; [‡]yea, upon all the houses of joy [e]in the joyous city:

14 Because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the [§]forts and towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks;

15 ¶ Until [h]the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, [l]and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest.

16 Then [k]judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field.

17 And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever.

18 And [n]my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places, 19 When it shall hail, coming down [p]on the forest; and [l]the [q]city shall be low in a low place.

20 Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters,[2] that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass.

WOE to [a]thee[1] that spoilest, and thou wast not spoiled; and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee! [b]when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee.

2 O LORD, [c]be gracious unto us; we have waited for thee: [d]be thou their arm every morning, [e]our salvation also in the time of trouble.

3 At [f]the noise of the tumult the people fled; at the lifting up of thyself the nations were scattered.

4 And [g]your spoil[2] shall be gathered like the gathering of the caterpillar: as [h]the running to and fro of locusts shall he run upon them.

5 [i]The LORD is exalted; for [k]he dwelleth on high: [l]he hath filled Zion with judgment and righteousness.

proudest, and that think themselves not accountable to any for what they say and do; even for kings it is prepared. It is deep and large, sufficient to receive the world of the ungodly: the "pile thereof is fire and much wood." God's wrath is the fire, and sinners make themselves fuel to it; and the breath of the Lord (the power of his anger) kindles it, and will keep it ever burning.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXI. VANITY OF AN ALLIANCE WITH EGYPT.—Ver. 1. This chapter coincides with the beginning and conclusion of the preceding one. The Israelites had formed a treaty with Egypt, and the Jews were disposed to do the same: but wo to those of either nation, who confided in that people for chariots, horses, and horsemen; by which they were induced to neglect looking to, and seeking help from, God, consulting him, his power, and mercy. "The Lord had commanded the Israelites never to return to Egypt, lest they should forget the benefit of their redemption; and lest they should be corrupted with the superstition and idolatry of Egypt, and so forsake God." Ver. 2, 3. The Israelites relied on the wisdom and policy of the Egyptians, as well as on their forces; but they should have remembered, that the Lord also was wise; and having denounced their destruction for their iniquity, he would not call back his word, and would easily find means to effect his purpose. For the Egyptians were but feeble men, and their horses mere animals: they could not therefore resist him and his ministering spirits; but would fall down, and fail, along with those whom they endeavoured to help. Ver. 4, 5. The Lord himself would undertake to defend Zion against the Assyrians; so that the Jews would have no occasion for help from Egypt. He would no more regard the number or clamour of the Assyrians, than a young lion does the noise of the shepherds that would drive him from his prey: and as birds defend their young by hovering over their nests, so would JEHOVAH defend and deliver Jerusalem. Notwithstanding the sins of the Jews, he would pass over them, or step between them and the evil that threatened them, and not allow the destroying angel to smite them with the Assyrians; even as he protected the houses of Israel, when he destroyed the first-born of Egypt. Ver. 6, 7. The whole race of Israel had revolted from God, with many and great aggravations. The ten tribes were doomed to destruction, but the Jews, being yet spared, were exhorted to return unto him; and it was also predicted, that their preservation from the Assyrians would be attended with zeal against idolatry, and contempt of their idols, even those of silver or gold. Ver. 8, 9. The power and army of the Assyrian conqueror fell, not by the sword of the powerful Egyptian, or that of the despised Jew, but by a mighty angel. Sennacherib fled from that invisible sword which had discomfited his choicest troops, and made haste to Nineveh, whither divine vengeance pursued him: his princes also that escaped, were frighted away, because of that ensign which the Lord displayed over Zion. The fire on his altar, consuming the atoning sacrifices, was the protection of his people, and as a furnace to purify them; but it menaced the destruction of all their enemies.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXII. THE MAN CHRIST JESUS, &C.—Ver. 1, 2. This chapter seems to be a detached prophecy, delivered at the close of the reign of Ahaz, and referring to the prosperous reign of pious Hezekiah; though some think that it was delivered about the time of Sennacherib's invasion. Ahaz and his princes had ruled very wickedly, but a king was about to mount the throne, who would reign in righteousness, employ upright magistrates, and protect the people both from internal oppression by his equitable administration, and from external invaders by his faith and prayers.—But this interpretation falls far short of the expressive language employed by the prophet. Christ our righteous King, and those of his true disciples who exercise authority under him, in church or state, are evidently intended. He alone is "the Man," who shelters sinners from the wrath of God, the temptations of Satan, and the rage of the world; having sustained the storm himself. The consolations and graces of his spirit are as rivers of water in this dry land: and as the overhanging rock affords the most complete and refreshing shade from the noonday sun, to the traveller wearied in the sultry desert; so his power, truth, and love, yield the believer the most complete protection and refreshment in this weary land, through which he is travelling to heaven. Ver. 3, 4. Hezekiah's care to have his people duly instructed would render those, who had any spiritual discernment, clear-sighted; whereas before, they were enveloped in uncertainty, through the prevalence of ignorance and error. The deliverance from the Assyrians would render the people more attentive to instruction, and their minds more capable of receiving it. Even the inconsiderate and imprudent would apply their hearts to understand divine knowledge; and they, that before could scarcely lisp a broken sentence on such subjects, would learn to speak of them fluently and pertinently. But the superior knowledge, and spiritual gifts and graces of Christ's kingdom are chiefly intended; and not without reference to his miracles and those of his apostles. "God shall plentifully afford men the light of truth, and give them grace to make a good use of instruction." "Those that are weak in faith shall come to more perfect degrees of knowledge." "The most rude and illiterate, such as could not speak so as to be understood, shall discourse clearly and intelligibly of God and of their duty." "That this prophecy chiefly relates to the times of the gospel, will appear by comparing it with chap. xxix. 18, xxxv. 5. If it be objected that other prophecies foretell the blinding of the Jews under the gospel; we may answer with St. Paul, that 'the children of

COME near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people: let the earth hear, and [a]all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it.

2 For [b]the indignation of the LORD is upon all nations, [c]and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter.

3 Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcases, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood.

4 And [d]all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree.

5 For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold, it shall come down [e]upon Idumea,[f] and upon [g]the people of my curse, to judgment.

6 The sword of the LORD is [h]filled with blood; it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for [i]the LORD hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.

7 And the [j]unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be [k]soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness.

8 For it is [l]the day of the LORD's vengeance, and the year of recompences for the controversy of Zion.

9 And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch.

10 It shall not be quenched [m]night nor day; [n]the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: [o]from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever:

11 But the [p]cormorant and the bittern shall possess it; the owl also and the raven shall dwell in it: and he shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness.

OUTPOURING OF GOD'S SPIRIT.—Ver. 15. This is the great thing that God's people comfort themselves with the hopes of, that "the Spirit shall be poured out upon them," that there shall be a more plentiful effusion of the Spirit of grace than formerly, according as the necessity of the church, in its desolate estate, calls for. This comes from on high, and therefore they look up to their Father in heaven for it. When God designs favours for his church, he pours out his Spirit, both to prepare his people to receive his favours, and to qualify those whom he designs to employ as instruments of his favour, and give them success, for their endeavours to repair the desolations of the church are all fruitless, "until the Spirit be poured out upon them," and then the work is done suddenly. The kingdom of the Messiah was brought in, and set up, by the pouring out of the Spirit, Acts ii., and so it is still kept up, and will be to the end.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIII. PURPORT OF THE CHAPTER.—Ver. 1. This chapter forms a distinct prophecy, relating chiefly to the Assyrian invasion.—"And could a translation be made of it, that should come up to the original, it would appear to be as noble a piece of poetry, as is to be found in the most admired writings of the ancients." [Lowth.]—Sennacherib, not having received any provocation, and urged on entirely by rapacity and ambition, had plundered the neighbouring nations; and he had treacherously violated his treaty with Hezekiah, after having taken all his treasures as the price of peace. But he would soon be deprived of power to spoil or to deceive; and then his camp would be plundered by the Jews, and he would be most treacherously dealt with by his sons, who would slay him in the temple of his idol.—Scott.

TRUE STABILITY.—Ver. 6. "Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of salvation." Here is a desirable end proposed, and that is "the stability of our times;" that things be not disturbed and unhinged at home, and the "strength of salvation," deliverance from, and success against, enemies abroad. The salvation that God ordains for his people has strength in it; it is a horn of salvation. And here are the way and means for obtaining this end—"wisdom and knowledge;" not only piety but prudence. That is it, which, by the blessing of God, will be the "stability of our times, and the strength of salvation." That wisdom which is first pure, then peaceable, and which sacrifices private interests to a public good; such prudence as this will establish truth and peace, and fortify the bulwarks, in defence of them.

Thirdly, (Ver. 18,) "Thine heart shall meditate terror," meditate it with pleasure when it is over. Thou shalt think thou still hearest the alarm in thine ears, when all the cry was, "Arm, arm, arm; every man to his post. Where is the scribe, or secretary of war? Let him appear, to draw up the muster-roll. Where is the receiver, and paymaster of the army? Let him see what he has in bank, to defray the charge of a defence. Where is he that counted the towers? Let him bring in the account of them, that care may be taken to put a competent number of men in each." Or, these words may be taken as Jerusalem's triumph over the vanquished army of the Assyrians, and the rather, because the apostle alludes to them in his triumphs over the learning of this world, when it was baffled by the gospel of Christ, 1 Cor. i. 20. The virgin, the daughter of Zion, despises all their military preparations. Where is the scribe, or muster-master of the Assyrian army? Where is their weigher, (or treasurer,) and where their engineers that counted the towers? They are all either dead or fled. There is an end of them.—Henry.

SAFETY IN GOD.—Ver. 20—22. That city, which God hath chosen for the centre of his worship, and in which the Jews observed all their solemnities was, it was probable, when this prophecy was delivered, threatened with an immediate siege: but it would soon become a quiet habitation. The Assyrians thought they could as easily take and destroy it, as a man removes a tent; but it would not suffer the least injury. For the glorious JEHOVAH, the acknowledged Judge, Lawgiver, and King of Israel, would be the almighty protector of his temple and his worshippers: surrounding them by his powerful presence, as with large rivers and winding streams, into which no galley, or ship of war, belonging to their enemies, should enter. "He shall give Jerusalem protection without danger. In other cities and countries, where they have the commodity of large rivers and inlets from the sea, there may be some peril of advantage to an enemy; but here shall be no such matter." [Bp. Hall.]—The security and privileges of the gospel-church, especially in those glorious times predicted, seem here principally intended; for Jerusalem was never, after that, long together preserved from hostile invasions, and it has been repeatedly taken down as a tent.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXIV. DOOM OF ANTICHRISTIAN FOES.—Ver. 3—15. The description of vast multitudes slain, and left unburied till they become intolerably offensive; and of human blood shed in such prodigious quantities, as to authorize the strong hyperboles of the mountains being melted, and the land soaked with it, whilst the dust of the earth is fattened with the fat and flesh of men, suggests most tremendous ideas of divine judgments; and it impresses the mind with a [illegible] since, which will be made by the [illegible]

14 *The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with [†]the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the [‡]screech-owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest.

15 There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vultures also be gathered, every one with her mate.

16 ¶ [d]Seek ye out of the book of the LORD, and read; no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate: for my mouth it hath commanded, and his spirit it hath gathered them.

The joyful flourishing of Christ's kingdom, 1. The weak are encouraged by the virtues and privileges of the gospel, 3.

THE wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, [e]and blossom as the rose.

2 It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, [g]they shall see the glory of the LORD, and the excellency of our God.

3 ¶ [h]Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees.

5 Then [m]the eyes of the blind shall be opened,[1] [n]and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped:

6 Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, [p]and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert.

7 And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: [s]in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be [†]grass, with reeds and rushes.

8 And [t]an highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called, [u]The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but [‡]it shall be for those: [y]the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.

9 No lion shall be there,[2] nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; [a]but the redeemed shall walk there.

10 And [b]the ransomed of the LORD shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, [d]and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

PSALM XXXVI.

Sennacherib invadeth Judah, 1. Rabshakeh's blasphemous persuasions to the people, 4. His words are told to Hezekiah, 22.

NOW it came to pass in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, [b]that Sennacherib king of Assyria came up against all the defenced cities of Judah, and took them.

2 ¶ And the king of Assyria [e]sent Rabshakeh[1] from Lachish to Jerusalem, unto king Hezekiah, with a great army: and he stood by [d]the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field.

3 Then came forth unto him [e]Eliakim, Hilkiah's son, which was over the house, and [f]Shebna *the scribe, and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder.

4 And Rabshakeh said unto them, Say ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

5 I say, sayest thou, (but they are but [†]vain words,) [‡]I have counsel and strength for war: now, on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

6 Lo, thou trustest in the staff of this broken reed, on Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him.

7 But if thou say to me, [l]We trust in the LORD our God: [m]is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

8 Now therefore give [§]pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, [n]and I will give thee two thousand horses,[2] if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of [o]the least of my master's servants, [p]and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And [q]am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? The LORD said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

11 Then said Eliakim and Shebna and Joah unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants [r]in the Syrian language; the kingdom of Christ, and of the dreadful judgments, with which that event will at length be ushered in. The dissolving of the hosts of heaven, represents the surprising revolutions, which will everywhere take place, in the constitution of kingdoms and states, Rev. vi. 13. The Lord's "sword bathed in heaven," may allude to some method then in use of burnishing or tempering armour; and it implies, that the vengeance would be executed according to the wise and righteous purposes of God, and with invincible power. —Idumea, or the land of Edom, was a rival of the Jews: the prediction might have a partial accomplishment in the desolations occasioned by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Macedonians, and Romans, in which that district was involved. But those events had no connection with that glorious spread of religion next predicted; nor doth it appear that they were answerable to such a tremendous description. Idumea may therefore be taken as a general name, denoting the nations inimical to the church, as the Edomites were to the Jews; and for the kingdom of Antichrist.—As "the people of his curse," (peculiarly deserving his wrath, and exposed to it,) the Lord had devoted them to utter destruction; and would make them a sacrifice at Bozrah, the chief city of Idumea; that is, at the chief residence of Antichrist. The sword of divine justice will then be satisfied with the fatness and blood of the enemies of God; as when lambs, rams, and goats were slain, and their fat was burnt upon the altar. And not only inferior enemies, but unicorns, bullocks, and bulls will thus be sacrificed in abundance; that is, the proud and mightiest princes of the world will there be destroyed by the justice and power of God. These verses relate to the city where this sacrifice was to be made, or at least begun. The language is more emphatical than what had been used respecting Babylon, another type of antichristian Rome. And the metaphors are taken from Sodom and Gomorrah, if indeed they be metaphors; but probably they will be literally fulfilled, and Sodom will appear to have been another emblem of that devoted city. Perhaps subterraneous fire will consume the seat of Antichrist; (and plentiful provision is evidently made in that part of the world, for such an event;) and a continual burning and smoke in several places, may perhaps mark out the place on which that city stood, to all future ages; whilst all the rest of the neighbourhood may be entirely desolated, without any inhabitant, or any [illegible] with the line of confusion, [illegible] without form and void,") and that [illegible]

CHAP. XXXV. PROPHETIC DESCRIPTION OF THE GOSPEL.—Ver. 5—10. "The miraculous works wrought by our blessed Saviour are so clearly specified, that we cannot avoid making the application: and our Saviour himself has plainly referred to this passage." Matt. xi. 4, 5—Where are these works so distinctly marked by any of the prophets as in this place? And how could they be marked more distinctly? The calling of the Gentiles was meant by the waters and streams breaking forth in the desert: when that dry and parched soil was converted into a well-watered country. The word rendered "parched ground" signifies "glowing sand," both in Hebrew and Arabic—"The glowing sandy plain, in the hot countries, has the appearance of water." "As to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain, which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until, when he cometh thereto, he findeth it to be nothing." [Koran. Bp. Lowth.] The knowledge of the truth and will of God, when made very plain and clear to any people, is like casting up an highway through a country that was before impassable. The Gentile world was a desert, in this as well as other respects: no highway to God and heaven was to be there met with. This advantage began to be vouchsafed, when the gospel was sent to the nations: yet an immense proportion of the earth is still destitute of it. This authorized way shall be called "the way of holiness," as it leads to a holy God and a holy heaven, and no unclean or unconverted sinner passes over it; but it is appropriated to those, before mentioned, who have experienced the power of the Saviour's grace. These are wayfaring men, who really desire to walk in this way: and, though they be men of weak capacities, unlearned, and apt to mistake, they shall be preserved from missing the road. No tempter or persecutor can injure those who walk in it; and at the period chiefly predicted, the great enemy of souls shall be chained up, and the persecutors of the church be cut off; so that none of them shall be found there, even to affright the pilgrims. Then sinners, ransomed by the blood, and rescued by the power of their Redeemer, the Lord of hosts, shall return, join themselves to the Lord in his holy ordinances, and go on their way abounding in joy and praise; till they arrive at the heavenly Zion, and have for ever done with sorrow and sighing, and be crowned with everlasting joy and felicity.—SCOTT.

12 But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

13 ¶ Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria.[1]

14 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you.

15 Neither let Hezekiah [y]make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah; for thus saith the king of Assyria, [l]Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

17 Until [c]I come and take you away to a land like your own land, [d]a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

18 Beware [e]lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The LORD will deliver us. [f]Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

19 Where are the gods of [g]Hamath and [h]Arphad?[2] where are the gods of [i]Sepharvaim? [k]and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, [l]that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 ¶ Then came [n]Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, that was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah [o]with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

Hezekiah mourning, sendeth to Isaiah to pray for them, 1. Isaiah comforteth them, 6. An angel slayeth the Assyrians, 36. Sennacherib is slain by his own sons, 37.

AND [a]it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that [b]he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, [c]and went into the house of the LORD.

2 And [d]he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, [e]This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of *blasphemy; [f]for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

4 [g]It may be the LORD thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent [h]to reproach the living God, [i]and will reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore [k]lift up thy prayer [l]for the remnant that is †left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, [m]Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the LORD, [n]Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, [o]I will ‡send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and [p]I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So [q]Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against [r]Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from [s]Lachish.

9 And [t]he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, [u]Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, [x]thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have [y]the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as [z]Gozan, and [a]Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of [b]Eden which were in [c]Telassar?

13 Where is the king of [d]Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Hena, and [e]Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah [f]received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: [g]and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah [h]prayed unto the LORD, saying, tion; were doing it by halves, and ready to sit down short of a thorough reformation; and then God visited them with this judgment, to put life into them, and that good cause. We must not wonder, if, when we are doing well, God sends afflictions to quicken us to do better, to do our best, and to press forward toward perfection. 2. That we must never be secure of the continuance of our peace in this world, nor think our mountain stands so strong, that it cannot be moved. Hezekiah was not only a pious king, but prudent, both in his administration at home, and in his treaties abroad. His affairs were in a good posture, and he seemed particularly to be upon good terms with the king of Assyria, for he had lately made his peace with him by a rich present; 2 Kings xviii. 14; and yet that perfidious prince pours an army into his country all of a sudden, and lays it waste. It is good for us, therefore, always to keep up an expectation of trouble, that, when it comes, it may be no surprise to us, and then it will be the less a terror. 3. That God sometimes permits the enemies of his people, even those that are most impious and treacherous, to prevail far against them. The king of Assyria took all, or most, of the defenced cities of Judah, and then the country would of course be an easy prey to him. Wickedness may prosper a while, but cannot prosper always. 4. Proud men love to talk big, to boast of what they are, and have, and have done, nay and of what they will do, to insult over others, and set all mankind at defiance. 5. It is an easy thing, and very common, for those that persecute the church and people of God, to pretend a commission from him for so doing. Rabshakeh could say, "Am I now come up without the Lord?" when really he was come up against the Lord, chap. xxxvii. 28. They that kill the servants of the Lord think they do him service, and say, "Let the Lord be glorified." But, sooner or later, they will be made to know their error, to their cost, to their confusion.

THE ANSWER MADE TO HIM.—Ver. 11. We may hence learn these lessons: 1. That, while princes and counsellors have public matters under debate, it is not fair to appeal to the people. It was a reasonable motion which Hezekiah's plenipotentiaries made, that this parley should be held in a language which the people did not understand, ver. 11, because reasons of state are secret things, and ought to be kept secret, the vulgar being incompetent judges of them. 2. Proud and haughty scorners, the fairer they are spoken to, commonly speak the fouler. Nothing could be said more mildly and respectfully than that which Hezekiah's agents said to Rabshakeh. 3. When Satan would tempt men from trusting in God, and cleaving to him, he does it by insinuating, that, in yielding to him, they may better their condition; but it is a false suggestion, and grossly absurd, and therefore to be rejected with the utmost abhorrence. When the world and the flesh say to us, "'Make an agreement' with us, 'and come out to us,' submit to our dominion, and come into our interests, and 'you shall eat every one of his own vine:'" they do but deceive us, promising liberty then when they would lead us into the basest captivity and slavery. 4. Nothing can be more absurd in itself, nor a greater affront to the true and living God, than to compare him with the gods of the heathen; as if he could do no more for the protection of his worshippers than they can for the protection of theirs; and as if the god of Israel could as easily be mastered as the gods of Hamath and Arphad. Whereas they are vanity and a lie, they are nothing; he is the great "I AM:" they are the creatures of men's fancy, and the works of men's hands; he is the Creator of all things. 5. It is sometimes prudent not to "answer a fool according to his folly." Hezekiah's command was, "Answer him not;" it will but provoke him to rail and blaspheme yet more and more; leave it to God to stop his mouth, for you cannot."—Henry.

CHAP. XXXVII. A DOUBLE PICTURE—PROFANITY AND PIETY.—Ver. 8—20. We may observe here, 1. That if God gives us inward satisfaction in the promise, this may confirm us in our silent bearing of reproaches. God answered Hezekiah, but it does not appear that he, after deliberation, sent any answer to Rabshakeh; but God having taken the work into his own hands, he quietly left the matter with him. So Rabshakeh returned to the king his master for fresh instructions. 2. Those that delight in war shall have enough of it. Sennacherib, without provocation given to him, or warning given by him, went forth to war against Judah; and now with as little ceremony the king of Ethiopia goes forth to war against him, ver. 9. They that are quarrelsome may expect to be quarrelled with; and God sometimes checks the rage of his enemies by giving it a powerful diversion. 3. It is bad to talk proudly and profanely, but it is worse to write so, for that argues more deliberation and design, and what is written spreads further, lasts longer, and does the more mischief; atheism and irreligion, written, will certainly be reckoned for another day. 4. Great success often harden sinners' hearts in their sinful ways, and make them the more daring. Because the kings of Assyria have destroyed all lands, (though, in fact, they were but a few that fell within their reach,) therefore they doubt not but to destroy God's land; because the gods of the nations were unable to help, they conclude the God of Israel is so; because the idolatrous kings of Hamath and Arphad became an easy prey to them, therefore the religious reforming king of Judah must needs be so too. Thus is this proud man ripened for ruin by the sunshine of prosperity. 5. Liberty of access to the throne of grace, and liberty of speech there, are the unspeakable privilege of the Lord's people at all times, especially in times of distress and danger. Hezekiah took Sennacherib's letter, and spread it before the Lord; not designing to make any complaints against him, but those grounded upon the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 [n]Incline thine ear, O LORD, and hear; open thine eyes, O LORD, and see; and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the [s]nations, and their countries, 19 And have [t]cast their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone; therefore they have destroyed them.

20 Now therefore, O LORD our God, save us from his hand, [u]that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD, [t]even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [n]Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the LORD hath spoken concerning him, The virgin, [y]the daughter of Zion, [z]hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

23 [b]Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and [c]against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against [d]the Holy One of Israel.

24 By [*]thy servants hast thou reproached the LORD, and hast said, [f]By the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon: and I will cut down the [†]tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir-trees thereof: and I will enter into the height of his border, and the forest [‡]of his Carmel.

25 I have digged, and drunk water; and [g]with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of the [§]besieged places.

26 Hast thou not heard [l]long ago, how I have done it; and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste defenced cities into ruinous heaps.

27 Therefore their inhabitants were [*]of small power, they were dismayed and confounded: they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the house-tops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

28 But I know thy [†]abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

29 Because [m]thy rage against me, and [n]thy tumult is come up into mine ears; therefore [o]will I put my hook in thy nose, [l]and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

30 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such as groweth of itself; and the second year that which springeth of the same: and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruit thereof.

31 And the [‡]remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again [r]take root downward, and bear fruit upward:

32 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and [§]they that escape out of mount Zion: [s]the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

33 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it.

34 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the LORD.

35 For I will defend this city to save it, [z]for mine own sake, [a]and for my servant David's sake.

36 ¶ Then [b]the angel of the LORD went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and fourscore and five thousand: [c]and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

37 ¶ So [d]Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of [*]Armenia: and [g]Esarhaddon his son reigned in his stead.

IN those days [a]was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, [*]Set thine house in order: [c]for thou shalt die, and not live.

2 Then Hezekiah [d]turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the LORD,

3 And said, [e]Remember now, O LORD, I beseech thee, how [f]I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept [†]sore.

4 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD to Isaiah, saying,

[l] From these words, compared with the first verse, it appears that this sickness would have put an end to Hezekiah's life, if he had not earnestly prayed to God to spare him; and that God was moved by his prayers to reverse the sentence of death which was gone out against him, and to grant him a longer continuance on the throne of his kingdom. It appears also, from the preceding chapter, that Hezekiah by his prayers obtained another miraculous deliverance; namely, that from the army of the Assyrians.—READING.

his own hand-writing. Let the thing speak itself, here it is in black and white; "Open thine eyes, O Lord, and see." God allows his praying people to be humbly free with him, to utter all their words, as Jephthah did, before him, to spread the letter, whether of a friend or an enemy, before him, and leave the contents, the concern of it, with him. 6. The great and fundamental principles of our religion, applied by faith, and improved in prayer, will be of sovereign use to us in our particular exigencies and distresses, whatever they are; to them, therefore, we must have recourse, and abide by them; so Hezekiah did here. He encouraged himself with this, that the God of Israel is the Lord of hosts, of all hosts; of the hosts of Israel, to animate them; of the hosts of their enemies, to dispirit and restrain them; that he is God alone, and there is none that can stand in competition with him; that he is the "God of all kingdoms of the earth," and disposes of them all as he pleases, for he made heaven and earth; and therefore both can do any thing, and does every thing. 7. When we are afraid of men that are great destroyers, we may with humble boldness appeal to God as the great Saviour. They have indeed destroyed the nations, who had thrown themselves out of the protection of the true God by worshipping false gods: but the Lord, the God alone, is our God, our King, our Lawgiver, and he will save us, who is "the Saviour of them that believe." 8. We have enough to take hold of, in our wrestling with God by prayer, if we can but plead that his glory is interested in our case; that his name will be profaned if we are run down, and glorified if we are relieved. Thence therefore will our most prevailing pleas be drawn; Do it for thy glory's sake.

REFLECTIONS ON SENNACHERIB'S DEFEAT.—Ver. 21—38. All the malice, and all the motions and projects, of the church's enemies, are under the cognizance and check of the church's God. 1. Sennacherib was active and quick, here, and there, and everywhere, but God knew his going out, and his coming in, and had always an eye upon him, ver. 28. And that was not all; he had a hand upon him too, a strict hand, a strong hand, "a hook in his nose, and a bridle in his lips," with which, though he was very headstrong and unruly, he could, and would "turn him back by the way he came," ver. 29. "Hitherto he shall come, and no further." God had signed Sennacherib's commission against Judah, chap. x. 6, here he supersedes it; he has frightened them, but he must not hurt them, and therefore is discharged from going any further; nay his commitment is here signed, by which he is clapped up, to answer for what he had done beyond his commission. 2. God is his people's bountiful Benefactor, as well as their powerful Protector; both a Sun and a Shield to those who trust in him. Jerusalem shall be defended, ver. 35, the besiegers shall not come into it, no, nor come before it, with any regular attack, but they shall be routed before they begin the siege, ver. 33. But this is not all; God will return in mercy to his people, and will do them good. Their land shall be more than ordinarily fruitful, so that their losses shall be abundantly repaired: they shall not feel any of the ill effects either of the enemy's wasting the country, or of their own being taken off from husbandry. But the earth, as at first, shall bring forth of itself, and they shall live, and live plentifully, upon its spontaneous productions. The blessing of the Lord can, when he pleases, make rich, without the hand of the diligent. And let them not think that the desolations of their country would excuse them from observing the sabbatical year, which happened (as it should seem) the year after, and when they were not to plough or sow; no, though they had not now their usual stock beforehand for that year, yet they must religiously observe it, and depend upon God to provide for them. God must be trusted in the way of duty. 3. There is no standing before the judgments of God, when they come with commission. (1.) The greatest numbers cannot stand before them; one angel shall, in one night, lay a vast army of men dead upon the spot, when God commissions him so to do, ver. 36. Here are 185,000 brave soldiers in an instant turned into so many dead corpses. Many think the 76th Psalm was penned upon occasion of this defeat; where, from "the spoiling of the stout-hearted," and sending them to sleep their long sleep, ver. 5, it is inferred that God is "more glorious and excellent than the mountains of prey," ver. 4, and that "he, even he, is to be feared," ver. 7. Angels are employed, more than we are aware of, as minister's of God's justice, to punish the pride, and break the power, of wicked men. (2.) The greatest men cannot stand before them. "The great king, the king of Assyria," looks very little when he is forced to return, not only with shame, because he cannot accomplish what he had projected with so much assurance, but with terror and fear, lest the angel that had destroyed his army should destroy him; yet he is made to look less, when his own sons, who should have guarded him, sacrificed him to his idol, whose protection he sought, ver. 37, 38. God can quickly stop their breath, who "breathe out threatenings and slaughter" against his people, and will do it when they have filled up the measure of their iniquity; and "the Lord is known by" these "judgments which he executes," known to be a God that resists the proud. Many prophecies were fulfilled in this providence; which should encourage us, as far as they look further, and are designed as common and general assurances of the safety of the church and of all that trust in God, to depend upon God for the accomplishment of them. He that has delivered, doth and will. Lord, forgive our enemies; but, "so let all thine enemies perish, O Lord."—Henry.

9 ¶ The writing of Hezekiah king of Judah,[2] when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness:

10 I said, in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave: I am deprived of the residue of my years.

11 I said, [u]I shall not see the LORD, even the LORD, in the land of the living: I shall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world.

12 Mine age is departed, and is removed from me [y]as a shepherd's tent:[3] I [z]have cut off like a weaver my life; [a]he will cut me off [§]with pining sickness: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

13 I reckoned till morning, that as a lion, so will he break all my bones: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

14 Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter;[4] I did mourn as a dove: mine eyes fail with looking upward: O LORD, I am oppressed; [‖]undertake for me.

15 What shall I say? he hath both spoken unto me, and himself hath done it: [b]I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.

16 O LORD, [k]by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.

17 Behold, *for peace I had great bitterness; but thou hast [†]in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for [l]thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.[5]

18 For [m]the grave cannot praise thee; death can not celebrate thee: [n]they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.

19 The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day; the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

20 The LORD was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

21 For Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaster upon the boil, and he shall recover.

22 Hezekiah also had said, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the LORD?

AT that time [a]Merodach-baladan,[1] the son of Baladan, [b]king of Babylon, [c]sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered.

2 And Hezekiah was glad of them, and shewed them the house of his *precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his [†]armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not.

3 ¶ Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee?[2] And Hezekiah said, [h]They are come from a far country unto me, even from Babylon.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts;

6 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

7 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and [n]they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, [o]Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken: he said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days.

prayer, and remind us to settle all our concerns; and, as the testimony of our conscience to the simplicity of our faith and obedience, must form one chief support in a dying hour; we should endeavour so to live, that death may not surprise us when this evidence is dubious.—Whatever may be inferred from second causes, we shall surely live till our measure of services is accomplished; but it is just cause of regret and humiliation, when sloth or imprudence has induced us to neglect what we might otherwise have performed.—It is good for us to recollect, and in some cases to record, the circumstances which relate to the frame of our minds under heavy calamities. The review will supply cause for humiliation and gratitude: we shall commonly find that our faith, hope, and submission were greatly alloyed with distrust, dejection, and impatience. Sometimes we inordinately desired life, at others we were sinfully reluctant to live; and when the Lord hath corrected us for our good, we have been tempted to conclude that he meant to destroy us. But if, indeed, our lives should be prematurely cut off, and we deprived of the residue of our years, and no longer allowed to meet the Lord and his saints in his earthly sanctuary: yet, if we be Christians, we shall remove to a more glorious assembly, behold his glory more fully, and praise him in more exalted strains, even when our bodies go down to the gates of the grave. We should always remember, that we now dwell in an earthly tabernacle, that must shortly be taken down; and instead of being anxious to provide for, or indulge it, we should be seeking a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Let us then daily endeavour to exercise repentance, faith, love, and good works; and then, whether the Lord cut us off by pining sickness, or crush us by sudden death, we shall have no cause to complain or to mourn.—In tedious suffering our hearts may be ready to fail us, when expecting help from the Lord; and our immense debt, as well as our potent enemies, may alarm us: but our Surety hath undertaken for us; and as he paid our ransom, he will rescue our souls from the pit of destruction, and cast all our sins behind his back, and into the depths of the sea. Let us believe his promises, and wait upon him to make them good; let us walk watchfully through our remaining years, remembering the bitter convictions and corrections which sin hath occasioned, and the gracious deliverances that the Lord hath vouchsafed us. Thus the grace, truth, and power of our God will be the life of our souls; after a few more interchanges of peace and bitterness our sorrows will terminate, and our consolations will be perfected. But as we cannot praise God in the grave, let us embrace the present season of serving him among our fellow-sinners; hoping in his word, extolling his perfections, blessing him for his mercies, and obeying his precepts. Let us endeavour to make known his righteousness and salvation to all around us, and to those who are to follow us: bringing our children with us to the house of our God, and instructing them from his word; discoursing with them on all his wondrous works, showing them how ready he is to save and bless those that call upon him, and leading them to walk with us before him, in all his ordinances and commandments; that when we are removed, they may be capable of filling up our places to greater advantage, and hand down to their children and to posterity those truths and instructions which they have received from us.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXIX. LESSONS ON HEZEKIAH'S FOLLY.—Ver. 1—4. 1. It is a hard matter to keep the spirit low in the midst of great advancements. Hezekiah is an instance of it: he was a wise and good man; but when one miracle after another was wrought in his favour, he found it hard to keep his heart from being lifted up; nay, a little thing then drew them into the snare of pride. Blessed Paul himself needed a thorn in the flesh, to keep him from being "lifted up with the abundance of revelations." 2. We have need to watch over our own spirits, when we are showing our friends our possessions, what we have done and what we have got, that we be not proud of them, as if our might or our merit had purchased and procured us this wealth. 3. It is a great weakness for good men to value themselves much upon the civil respects that are paid them (yea, though there be something particular and uncommon in them) by the children of this world, and to be fond of their acquaintance. 4. It is just with God to take that from us, which we make the matter of our pride, and on which we build a carnal confidence. When David was proud of the numbers of his people, God took a course to make them fewer; and when Hezekiah boasts of his treasures, and looks upon them with too great a complacency, he is told that he acts like the foolish traveller who shows his money and gold to one that proves a thief, and is thereby tempted to rob him. 5. Those that are fond of an acquaintance and alliance with irreligious men, first or last will have enough of it, and will have cause to repent it. Hezekiah thought himself happy in the friendship of Babylon, though it was the mother of harlots and idolatries; but Babylon, who now courted Jerusalem, in process of time conquered her, and carried her captive. Leagues with sinners, and leagues with sin too, will end thus; it is therefore our wisdom to keep at a distance from them.—Henry.

CHAP. XL. SECOND PORTION OF THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.—Ver. 1, 2. We now enter upon the latter part of this prophecy, in which the name of the prophet is not mentioned; but it proceeds, as in one continued discourse; is full of consolatory topics, and treats almost entirely and most clearly of Christ and evangelical subjects. The whole seems to have been written after the deliverance of the Jews from the Assyrian invasion, and towards the close vealed, and all flesh shall see it together: [m]for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

6 The voice said, Cry.[2] And he said, What shall I cry? [o]All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field:

7 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; because the Spirit of the LORD bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass.

8 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but [p]the word of our God shall stand for ever.

9 ¶ O [l]Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; [*]O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength: lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!

10 Behold, [x]the Lord GOD will come with [†]strong hand,[3] and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his [‡]work before him.

11 He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that [§]are with young.

12 ¶ Who hath [c]measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with a span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a [‖]measure, and [d]weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance?

13 Who [e]hath directed the Spirit of the LORD, or, being [*]his counsellor, hath taught him?

14 With whom took he counsel, and who [†]instructed him, and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and shewed to him the way of [‡]understanding?

15 Behold, [f]the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance: behold, he taketh up [g]the isles as a very little thing.

16 And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, [h]nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt-offering.

17 All nations before him are [i]as nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity.

18 ¶ To [k]whom then will ye liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto him?

19 The workman melteth a graven image,[4] and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold, and casteth silver chains.

20 He that [§]is so impoverished, that he hath no oblation, chooseth a tree that will not rot: he seeketh unto him a cunning workman to prepare a graven image, that shall not be moved.

21 Have ye not known? have ye not heard? hath it not been told you from the beginning? have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth?

22 [l]It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that [r]stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in;

23 That [s]bringeth the princes to nothing: he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

24 Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown; yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth: and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble.

25 To whom then will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One.

26 Lift up your eyes on high, and behold [a]who hath created these things,[5] that [b]bringeth out their host by number: he calleth them all by names, by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth.

27 Why sayest thou, O Jacob,[6] and speakest, O Israel, My way is hid from the LORD, and [e]my judgment is passed over from my God?

28 ¶ Hast thou not known, hast thou not heard, that [g]the everlasting God, the LORD, the Creator of [h]the ends of the earth, [l]fainteth not, neither is weary? there is [k]no searching of his understanding.

29 He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength.

30 Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall:

31 But they that wait upon the LORD [c]shall [*]renew their strength; they shall [p]mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and [q]not faint.

KEEP silence before me, O islands; and let the people renew their strength: let them come near, then let them speak: [c]let us come near together to judgment.

2 Who raised up [*]the righteous man from the east, called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings? he gave them as the dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow.

[1] Comparing the passages of our prophet referred to in the margin, we find that the phrase "first and last" expresses the peerless majesty of God, who is He the "true God;" His eternity, supreme power, dignity, and glory, and His creation and government of all things. In those of St John, from the Revelation, the same Divine title is given to the Son.—WATERLAND.

of the prophet's life; and the style and imagery are elegant, rich, and often most sublime; so that it cannot be read without great delight, by one that relishes such beauties; even should he be ignorant of the spiritual and prophetic meaning of the sacred writer. The narration in the preceding chapter, (which perhaps was here inserted, as introductory to these predictions,) had mentioned the Babylonish captivity in express terms; and the prophet was here employed to prepare comfort for the church in expectation of that affliction, and when groaning under it. But though some reference is made in many places to the return of the Jews from Babylon, yet the prophet is so carried above all temporal deliverances, in the foresight of the great redemption of Christ, that it would often be absurd and vain to seek for any allusion to inferior events, in the language employed by him.

PREDICTION OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.—Ver. 3—5. It is generally supposed that the prophet here refers to the proclamation of Cyrus, and to the return of the Jews to Jerusalem; as their fathers had come out of Egypt to Canaan, through a vast wilderness: and it is considered as a command to make all things ready for their safe and commodious passage. But the Lord's coming to his people, not their return to Jerusalem, is predicted; and though his protecting presence with them on that occasion, may be alluded to; yet this forms a feeble interpretation compared with that of the Holy Spirit in the New Testament. John Baptist, in the desert part of the land, (an apt emblem of the barren state of the Jewish church at that time,) was a herald sent to proclaim the approach of Christ, as JEHOVAH their God.—When great princes, at the head of their armies, march through countries where highways are not previously cast up, they are used to send pioneers before them to level the country, to cut ways through impervious mountains and defiles, to make bridges over rivers, and to cast up roads through morasses and deep valleys, and to make their march as straight and unobstructed as they can. A spiritual preparation of a similar nature was to be made for the coming of Christ, and the setting up of his kingdom. Thus John Baptist's ministry was calculated to excite the attention of the people; to convince, alarm, and humble them; to subvert their self-confident prejudices and carnal expectations; to show them their need of a spiritual redemption, and to raise their expectations of those blessings which the Messiah was actually to bestow on them.—Scott.

When they tire or are weary, are sick and faint, when they meet with foul ways, he will carry them on, and take care they be not left behind. 3. He will gently lead them. By his word he requires no more service, and by his providence he inflicts no more trouble, than he will enable them for; for he considers their frame.

GOD'S POWER.—Ver. 12. 1. He has a vast reach; view the celestial globe, and you are astonished at the extent of it; but the great God "metes the heavens with a span;" to him they are but a hand-breadth, so large-handed is he. View the terraqueous globe, and he has the command of that too; all the waters in the world he can "measure in the hollow of his hand," where we can hold but a little water; and the dry land he easily manages, for he "comprehends the dust of the earth in a measure;" or with his three fingers; it is no more to him than a pugil, or that which we take up between our thumb and two fingers. 2. He has a vast strength, and can as easily move mountains and hills as the tradesman heaves his goods into the scales and out of them again; he poises them with his hand as exactly as if he weighed them in a pair of balances. This may refer to the work of creation, when the heavens were stretched out as exactly as that which is spanned; and the earth and waters put together in just proportions, as if they had been measured; and the mountains made of such a weight as to serve for ballast to the globe, and no more. Or, it may refer to the work of providence, (which is a continued creation,) and the consistency of all the creatures with each other.—Henry.

FOLLY OF IDOLATRY.—Ver. 18—20. The more wealthy of the Gentiles cast their images of inferior metal, and then employed the goldsmith to plait it with gold, and both to adorn and fasten it with silver chains: and this was intended as the likeness of their god, and the object of their worship! Nay, the poor man, who could scarcely afford an oblation, must have an idol, though it were but a block of durable wood, skilfully carved, and fixed up in his house! and even the Jews, though better instructed, were prone to the same stupidity; because they disliked the character and service of JEHOVAH. But as they had [illegible] when God came to affect their promised deliverance [illegible] God to jealousy, and bring ruin upon them, [illegible] them against the idolatry, wherewith [illegible]

Cyrus to be here meant; but it is not likely that he should be called "the righteous man," or righteousness, as in the original; nor could the success of that monarch give any general alarm to idolaters; and indeed this does not comport with that scheme of interpretation which seems most satisfactory.—JEHOVAH is pointing out to idolaters the evidences of his being the only true God, and is about to predict those events, which will terminate in the extermination of idolatry: but he previously calls the attention of the people to the victories, that had already been obtained by his worshippers over idolaters. The calling of Abraham, from the eastern country of Mesopotamia, was the first remarkable check, which God gave to idolatry after the flood, when it was about to become universal; and the opening of that grand design, by which the whole empire of Satan was in due time to be subverted. As the pattern of all future believers, both in the manner of his justification and the effects of his faith, Abraham was properly distinguished as "the righteous man." The Lord called him "to his foot," that is, to follow him in the most implicit and unreserved confidence and obedience. And though he was not generally a warrior, yet, relying on the power of JEHOVAH, he once marched forth, at the head of a small company of his servants, against four victorious heathen kings and their armies: and God gave them before him, and made him master of them; so that they became as dust, or stubble, driven by the wind, before his sword and bow; and he pursued them with entire safety, through those parts of the land, into which he had never before travelled. This, and other interpositions of God in his favour, gave him a great ascendency over kings and nations: and were earnests of the victories, which were promised to his posterity, and in due time granted.—The king and people of Egypt first fell before the God of Israel; and then Arad, Sihon, and Og, and their subjects, and the nations of Canaan; and thus Abraham, in his seed, ruled over many kings and nations. These events were notorious, and caused great alarms in the adjacent regions. Now, who effected these victories of Israel over the idolaters? even He that had predicted them, and had from the beginning called the generations of Israel from among the rest of the nations, speaking of them as already existing. And as JEHOVAH, the self-existent and eternal God, had been present with his people at first, so he would be to the last, to support them, and render them triumphant.—Scott.

WORM JACOB.—Ver. 14—16. God regards Jacob's low estate, and says, "'Fear not thou worm Jacob;' fear not that thou shalt be crushed; and 'ye men of Israel,'" (ye few men, so some read it, ye dead men, so others,) "do not give up yourselves for gone notwithstanding." Note, The grace of God will silence fears, even then when there seems to be the greatest cause for them; "perplexed, but not in despair." How Jacob and Israel are delivered from this low estate, and made as formidable as ever they had been despicable. But "by whom shall Jacob arise, for he is small?" We are here told, "I will help thee, saith the Lord:" and it is the honour of God to help the weak. He will help them, for He is their Redeemer, who is wont to redeem them, who has undertaken to do it. Christ is the Redeemer, from him is our help found. He will help them, for he is the "Holy One of Israel," worshipped among them in the beauty of holiness, and engaged by promise to them. The Lord will help them by enabling them to help themselves, and making Jacob to become a thrashing instrument. Observe, He is but an instrument, a tool in God's hand, that he is pleased to make use of; and he is an instrument of God's making, and is no more than God makes him.—Henry.

GOD'S COMPASSION.—Ver. 17—20. The care taken to water and victual and protect the poor Jews, when they returned from Babylon, as their fathers were provided for in the wilderness; and the re-establishment of their church and state, in the desolated land of Judah, form but feeble accomplishments of this remarkable prophecy. We have met with repeated predictions of the conversion of the Gentiles under similar allusions. The provision that is made for the consolation of the poor and humble people of God, in all their distresses and persecutions from age to age may be implied: but perhaps some intimation may also be given of the method, in which he will accomplish his promises of spreading the gospel. By "the poor and needy, who seek water and find none," the Lord seems to describe the case of people, destitute of the means of grace, yet brought to some indistinct and anxious desires of instruction and spiritual blessings. Cornelius and his friends, (the first Gentile converts,) were thus prepared to receive the gospel, before it was sent to them: and Paul was called into Europe by a vision of a man of Macedonia, who begged him to come over and help them. Indeed, we know not in what degree the Lord may facilitate the spread of Christianity in due time, by exciting anxious desires of instruction and salvation in the minds of those, who have not hitherto heard the gospel. Such desires will dictate earnest prayers, and the Lord will hear them, and not leave the suppliants destitute.

EVIDENCE OF THE TRUTH OF REVELATION FROM PROPHECY.—Ver. 25. JEHOVAH here predicts the victories of Cyrus over the Chaldeans and their allies, at least a hundred and fifty years before that expedition was undertaken; as one instance of his foreknowledge and invincible power. Media lay north of Babylon, and Persia eastward, and Cyrus commanded the forces of these two nations. The Lord raised him up to great power, and formed him a man of extraordinary exertion and [illegible] he did not find that [illegible] renounced idolatry to become the [illegible] [illegible] to Babylon, to [illegible] [illegible] their [illegible]

5 ¶ Thus saith God the LORD, [m]he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; [n]he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; [o]he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein:

6 I the LORD have [p]called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, [r]and give thee for a covenant of the people, [s]for a light of the Gentiles;[3]

7 To [t]open the blind eyes, [u]to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house.

8 I am the LORD; [x]that is my name:[4] and [y]my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images.

9 Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them.

10 ¶ Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down to the sea, and [$]all that is therein; the isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

11 Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that Kedar doth inhabit: let the inhabitants of the rock[5] sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains.

12 Let them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands.

13 ¶ The LORD shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall [!]prevail against his enemies.

14 I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and *devour at once.

15 I will [n]make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

16 And [o]I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; [p]I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things [†]straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them.

17 They shall be turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

18 ¶ Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see.

19 Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind, as he that is perfect, and blind as the LORD'S servant?

20 Seeing many things, but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not.

21 The LORD is [a]well pleased for his righteousness' sake; [b]he will magnify the law, and make [‡]it honourable.

22 But this is a people robbed and spoiled; [§]they are all of them snared in holes, and they [d]are hid in prison-houses: they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for [!]a spoil, and none saith, Restore.

23 Who among you will give ear to this? who [e]will hearken, and hear for the *time to come?

24 Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the LORD, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law.

25 Therefore [$]he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle: and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew not; [6] and it burned him, [!]yet he laid it not to heart.

them ever showed, or declared any thing of the kind; none ever heard their words to this effect. But the prophecies of Scripture form a regular system, which is fulfilling from age to age, without any failure, or appearance of it. The time of accomplishment was in several instances named, and the exact performance may be demonstrated; and some evidently relate to future times; being so arranged that we can tell very nearly the period, in the series of predicted events, in which we live. And this forms the grand demonstration of the divine original of the Scriptures, on which the Lord himself here evidently rests the weight of the argument; and it gathers strength in proportion, as that from transient miracles may be supposed to lose some part of its energy.—Scott.

CHAP. XLII. MESSIAH—THE FATHER'S SERVANT.—Ver. 1—4. When spiritual blessings are predicted under the veil of temporal deliverances; some passages will accord best to the type and others to the antitype: thus Cyrus and the redemption of the Jews are in this place lost sight of, that the Messiah and his salvation may be brought into full view.—"The natural import of the words, as well as the authority of the New Testament, do plainly determine this and many other texts, here and in the following chapters to an evangelical sense. The Holy Spirit taking occasion, from the deliverance of the Jews, to give the prophet a view of a more glorious redemption, which should be accomplished by the Messiah." [Lowth.]—"St. Matthew has applied it to Christ; nor can it, with justice or propriety, be applied to any other person or character whatever." [Bp. Lowth.]—Matt. xii. 17—21, He was "in the form of God, and took upon him the form of a servant." Being upheld by the Divine power in his human nature, he finished the work that was given him to do: he is the first Elect of God, for his own sake, and to be the Head of the Church; and all others are elect in him: in his person, righteousness, and mediation, the Father is well pleased and greatly delighted: the Holy Spirit resteth upon him, and is through him communicated to the church, chap. xi. 1—3; and he brings forth judgment to the Gentiles, or makes known unto them the truths, precepts, and ordinances of God, that they may become accepted believers, obedient servants, and spiritual worshippers of him. He did not appear with ostentatious pomp, attraction, and external honour; or to establish his kingdom by the violence and tumult of war and contention: but he was outwardly mean, and behaved with humility, gentleness, and kindness; and acquired his peaceful victories by beneficent miracles, convincing instructions, a holy example, patient sufferings, and divine influences. He is peculiarly tender to the broken-hearted believer, and those whom temptations and afflictions had almost crushed, like the bruised reed, and will by no means break them: he encourages the first beginning of holy desires in the young convert, and revives the almost expiring spark in the baffled and backsliding believer, though it were only as the offensive smoke from the stalks of the flax, when it doth not break forth into a flame: and he will bring forth every man's judgment, with most perfect agreement to the truth of his case and character. In his personal ministry, and in that of his servants, he met with vast difficulties and great opposition; and both he and they were treated with great contempt, enmity, and cruelty; but nothing could induce him to leave his work unfinished, or to be discouraged in it, till he had established judgment, (or the truth, righteousness, and worship of JEHOVAH,) in the earth: and the most distant nations, accepting his salvation, should submit to his authority.

GLORIOUS CHANGES.—Ver. 13—17. The prophet seems at first here to speak, but the Lord soon resumes the subject. Numerous and confederated enemies would obstruct his purpose of converting the Gentiles, and destroying idolatry: but he would, as a mighty warrior, with tremendous indignation, intimidate and destroy them. He had long suffered the nations to walk in their own ways, and idolatry and iniquity to prevail: but at the appointed period he would break silence, and with the most vigorous exertions of his power, and vehement convulsions in providence, he would ruin his enemies, and effect his great designs. And as the unbelieving Jews would crucify the Redeemer, and obstruct the gospel; he would turn their cultivated mountains into a waste, and make their rivers and pools dry land; that is, he would deprive them of their privileges, and cast them off from being his people. But he would bring the blind and benighted Gentiles into his church, by methods of which they had no previous knowledge; and lead them in the paths of truth, peace, and holiness, to which they had been entire strangers: he would afford them abundant light and instruction, make their way plain and pleasant to them, and not cast them off from being his people.—Scott.

CHAP. XLIII. REASONS OF GOD'S CARE OF HIS PEOPLE.—Ver. 1—4. The grounds of God's care and concern for his people, and the interests of his church and kingdom among men are here stated. Jacob and Israel, though in a sinful miserable condition, shall be looked after; for, 1. They are God's workmanship, "created by him unto good works," Eph. ii. 10. He has created them and formed them, not only given them a being, but this being, formed them into a people, constituted their government, and incorporated them by the charter of his covenant. The new creature, wherever it is, is of God's forming, "and he will not forsake the work of his own hands." 2. They are the people of his purchase; he has redeemed them; out of the land of Egypt he first redeemed them, and out of many another bondage, "in his love and in his pity," chap. lxiii. 9, much more will he them can declare this, and shew us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, It is truth.

10 Ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, [b]and my servant whom I have chosen; [c]that ye may know and believe me, and understand that [d]I am he: before me there was [†]no God formed, neither shall there be after me.

11 I, even [e]I, am the LORD; and besides me there is no saviour.

12 I have [f]declared, and have saved, and I have shewed, when there was [g]no strange god[3] among you: therefore ye are [h]my witnesses, saith the LORD, that I am God.

13 Yea, [i]before the day was, I am he; and there is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall [‡]let it?

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; For your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their [§]nobles, and the Chaldeans, [o]whose cry is in the ships.

15 I am the LORD, your Holy One, [q]the Creator of Israel, your King.

17 Which [s]bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army, and the power; they shall lie down together, they shall not rise: [u]they are extinct, they are quenched as tow.

18 ¶ Remember ye not the former things, neither consider the things of old.

19 Behold, I will do a new thing: now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? [z]I will even make a way in the wilderness, and [a]rivers in the desert.

20 The beast of the field[5] shall honour me, the dragons and the [‖]owls: because I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen.

21 This [c]people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise.

22 ¶ But thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob; but thou hast been weary of me, O Israel.

23 Thou hast not brought me the *small cattle of thy burnt-offerings, neither hast thou [i]honoured me with thy sacrifices. I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense.

24 Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money, neither hast thou [†]filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices; but [m]thou hast made me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.

25 I, [n]even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.

26 Put me in remembrance; let us plead together: [r]declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

27 Thy [s]first father hath sinned, and thy [‡]teachers have transgressed against me.

28 Therefore [u]I have profaned[6] the [§]princes of the sanctuary, [z]and have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches.

take care of those who are redeemed with the blood of his Son. 3. They are his peculiar people, whom he has distinguished from others, and set apart for himself; he has called them by name, as those he has a particular intimacy with and concern for, and they are his, appropriated to him, and that he has a special interest in. 4. He is their God in covenant, ver. 3. "I am the Lord thy God," worshipped by thee, and engaged by promise to thee; "the holy One of Israel," the God of Israel; for the true God is a holy One, and holiness becomes his house. And upon all these accounts he might justly say, "Fear not," ver. 1, and again ver. 5, "Fear not." Those that have God for them, need not fear who or what can be against them.

DIVINE KNOWLEDGE AND POWER.—Ver. 12—15. God has an infinite and infallible knowledge, as is evident from "the predictions of his word." "'I have declared, and I have showed,' that which has without fail come to pass; nay, I never declared or showed any thing, but it has been accomplished; 'I showed when there was no strange god among you,' when you pretended not to consult any oracles but mine, or to have any prophets but mine." It is said, when they came out of Egypt, that "the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him." He has also infinite and irresistible power, as is evident from the performances of his providence. He pleads not only, I have "showed," but I have "saved," not only foretold what none else could foresee, but done what none else could do; for, "'None can deliver out of my hand' those whom I will punish; not only no man can, but none of all the gods of the heathen can protect." It is therefore a "fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," because there is no getting out of them again. "I will work that I have designed, both in mercy and judgment, and who shall either oppose or retard it?"

PARDON OF SIN.—Ver. 25. "I, even I, am he who" yet "blotteth out thy transgressions." This gracious declaration of God's readiness to pardon sin comes in very strangely: the charge ran very high, "Thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities," ver. 24. Now one would think it should follow, "'I, even I, am he' that will destroy thee, and burthen myself no longer with care about thee." No, "I, even I, am he that will forgive thee;" as if the great God would teach us, that forgiving injuries is the best way to make ourselves easy, and to keep ourselves from being wearied with them. This comes in here, to encourage them to repent, because there is forgiveness with God, and to show the freeness of divine mercy; where sin has been exceeding sinful, grace appears exceeding gracious. Apply this, 1. To the forgiving of the sins of Israel, as a people in their national capacity: when God stopped the course of threatening judgments, and saved them from utter ruin, even then when he had them under severe rebukes, then he might be said to "blot out their transgressions." 2. To the forgiving of sins of every particular believing penitent; transgressions and sins, infirmities though ever so numerous, backslidings though ever so heinous. Observe here, (1.) How the pardon is expressed; he will "blot them out," as a cloud is blotted out by the beams of the sun; chap. xliv. 22, as a debt is blotted out, not to appear against the debtor; the book is crossed as if the debt were paid, because it is pardoned, upon the payment which the surety has made; or as a sentence is blotted out when it is reversed; as the curse was blotted out with the waters of jealousy, which made it of no effect to the innocent, Numb. v. 23. He will not "remember" the sin; which intimates not only that he will remit the punishment of what is past, but that it shall be no diminution to his love for the future. When God forgives, he forgets. (2.) What is the ground and reason of the pardon. It is not for the sake of any thing in us, but for his own sake; for his mercies'-sake, his promise'-sake, and especially for his own Son's sake, and that he may himself be glorified in it. (3.) How God glories in it; "I, even I, am he:" he glories in it as his prerogative; none can forgive sin but God only, and he will do it, it is his settled resolution, he will do it willingly and with delight; it is his pleasure, it is his honour; so he is pleased to reckon it.—Henry.

CHAP. XLIV. COVENANT BLESSINGS.—Ver. 3, 4. 1. They that are sensible of their spiritual wants, and the insufficiency of the creature to supply them, shall have abundant satisfaction in God; "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty," that thirsts after righteousness; he shall be filled. Water shall be poured out to those who truly desire spiritual blessings above all the delights of sense. 2. They that are barren as the dry ground shall be watered with the grace of God, with floods of that grace, and God will himself give the increase. If the ground be ever so dry, God has floods of grace to water it with. 3. The water God will "pour out" is, "his Spirit," John vii. 39, which God will pour out without measure upon the Seed, that is, Christ, Gal. iii. 16, and by measure upon all the seed of the faithful, upon all the praying, wrestling seed of Jacob, Luke xi. 13. This is the great New-Testament promise, that God, having sent his Servant Christ, and upheld him, will send his Spirit to uphold us. 4. This gift of the Holy Ghost is the great blessing God had reserved for the plentiful effusion of the latter days; "I will pour my Spirit, my blessing;" for where God gives his Spirit, he will give all other blessings. 5. This is reserved for the seed and offspring of the church; for so the covenant of grace runs, "I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed." To all who are thus made to partake of the privileges of adoption, God will give the spirit of adoption. 6. Hereby there shall be a great increase of the church; thus it shall be spread to distant places. Thus it shall be propagated and perpetuated to after-times: they shall spring up, and grow as fast as willows by the water courses, and in every thing that is virtuous and praiseworthy shall eth in the coals, and fashioneth it with hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his arms: [k]yea, he is hungry, and his strength faileth: he drinketh no water, and is faint.

13 The carpenter stretcheth out his rule, [l]he marketh it out with a line, he fitteth it with planes, and he marketh it out with the compass, and maketh it after the figure of a man, according to the beauty of a man; [m]that it may remain in the house.

14 He [n]heweth him down cedars, and taketh the cypress and the oak, which he [$]strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest: he planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it.

15 Then shall it be for a man to burn: for he will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread; yea, [o]he maketh a god, and worshippeth it: he maketh it a graven image, and falleth down thereto.

16 He burneth part thereof in the fire; with part thereof he eateth flesh; he roasteth roast, and is satisfied: yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Aha, I am warm, I have seen the fire:

17 And the residue thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image: he falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, [p]Deliver me; for thou art my god.

18 They [q]have not known nor understood: [r]for he hath [t]shut their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they [s]cannot understand.

19 And none [*]considereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge nor understanding to say, I have burned part of it in the fire; yea, also I have baked bread upon the coals thereof; I have roasted flesh, and eaten it: and shall I make the residue thereof [t]an abomination? shall I fall down to [†]the stock of a tree?

20 He feedeth on ashes: [x]a deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, [y]Is there not a lie in my right hand?[3]

21 ¶ [z]Remember these, O Jacob and Israel; for [a]thou art my servant: I have formed thee; thou art my servant: O Israel, [b]thou shalt not be forgotten of me.

22 I have [c]blotted out, [d]as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins: [e]return unto me; for I have redeemed thee.

23 Sing, O ye heavens; for the LORD hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth; break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein: for the LORD hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel.

24 Thus saith the LORD, [h]thy Redeemer, and he that formed thee from the womb, [k]I am the LORD that maketh all things; that stretcheth forth the heavens alone;[4] that spreadeth abroad the earth [l]by myself;

25 That [m]frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and [n]maketh diviners mad; that [o]turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish;

26 That [p]confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the [‡]decayed places thereof:

27 That saith to the deep, [s]Be dry; and I will dry up thy rivers:

28 That saith of [t]Cyrus, He is my shepherd,[5] and shall perform all my pleasure; even [x]saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid.

CHAP. XLV.

God, for his church's sake, calleth Cyrus, 1; he challenges obedience, 3; he convinceth the idols of vanity, 20.

THUS saith the LORD []to his anointed, to Cyrus, [b]whose right hand I have []holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, [d]to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut;

2 I will [e]go before thee, and [f]make the crooked places straight: I will [g]break in pieces the gates of brass,[1] and cut in sunder the bars of iron:

3 And [h]I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, [i]that thou mayest know that I, the LORD, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel.

4 For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, [m]I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, [n]though thou hast not known me.

5 ¶ I am the LORD, and there is none else, there is no God besides me: [p]I girded thee, though thou hast not known me;

6 That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none besides me: I am the LORD, and there is none else.

7 I [r]form the light, and [s]create darkness;[2] [t]I make peace, and create evil. I the LORD do all these things.

8 Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness; let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together: I the LORD have created it.

be eminent, and excel all about them, as the willows over-top the grass among which they grow, ver. 4. Note, It is a great happiness to the church, and a great pleasure to good men, to see the rising generation hopeful and promising. And it will be so if God pour his Spirit upon them, that blessing, that blessing of blessings.—Henry.

FABRICATION OF AN IDOL.—Ver. 12—17. The process of image-making is here described, in order to expose the folly of idolaters. The smith exhausted his strength, and would not allow himself time for rest or refreshment, in hammering out and fashioning his idol; which after all could not preserve him from fainting, or perishing, by hunger and thirst. The carpenter, in his way, too, employed his strength and skill in forming an idol of wood, to set up in his house, as the object of his adoration; though it was as senseless as the meanest part of his furniture, and far more useless. In order to be prepared to serve his neighbours with this strange manufacture, he provided a large stock of several kinds of timber, selecting that which grew most strong and straight: and even planting ash-trees, and waiting their growth, for this purpose. And when the boughs and chips, &c., had been used for fuel, he was so stupid as to make his deity of the same log, to prostrate himself before it, and to pray unto it, saying, "Deliver me, for thou art my God!" That which warmed him and cooked his food, though the refuse, was useful; but that which made the image was good for nothing, nay, an abomination.—We are not to conclude that all the idolaters were so stupid, as to terminate their adoration upon the lifeless image; for some of the heathen poets acutely derided the folly of those that did so. Yet the practice naturally led the unthinking multitude to adore the idol itself. And the invisible object, which a few conceived to be present with it and to be represented by it, was commonly as much the creature of their imagination, as the other was the work of their hands. In every way God was dishonoured, and robbed of his worship, and Satan was gratified as the object of their adoration.—The history of popery shows, that similar effects have uniformly followed from the use of images; whether as representing the saints and angels which the people invoke as mediators, or as representing the persons in the sacred Trinity.—Horace ludicrously puts these words into the mouth of an image: "I was of old the trunk of a fig-tree, a block of useless wood: when the carpenter, uncertain whether to make a bench or a Priapus, chose that I should be a god!" —"When therefore does it become a god? Behold, it is cast, fashioned, and carved!— It is not yet a god. It is soldered, put together, and set up! Neither is it yet a god!— Behold, it is adorned, consecrated, and prayed to! Then at length it is a god, when men [illegible] had thus confirmed the matter [illegible] in [illegible]

the expectations of all the Chaldean soothsayers and diviners; to prove them liars, and absolutely to infatuate them. He would expose the folly of all their wise men, when they could not read the handwriting to Belshazzar, nor detect Cyrus's device to take Babylon; and he would equally shame the politicians, when it was proved that they had used no suitable or effectual means of defence against the besiegers. At the same time he confirmed the word of his servant Isaiah, and performed every thing according to the information given by his messengers, the prophets, in bringing these events to pass.—When this prophecy was delivered, Jerusalem and Judah were inhabited and at peace. But it was intimated that the city and temple would be destroyed to the foundations; (this took place about one hundred and twenty years afterwards;) and that they should be rebuilt by orders from Cyrus, which happened about a hundred and seventy years after. Cyrus, (who is the only man, except Josiah, that was predicted by name much above a hundred years before his birth,) was appointed to act a shepherd over the Lord's scattered flock. The promise that Jerusalem should be inhabited, was to be fulfilled by Cyrus giving orders for its being rebuilt, and the foundations of the temple laid: and the foundations were indeed laid in his time, but it was not built till some time afterwards! The manner in which Babylon was taken was also foretold: the wide and deep river Euphrates, which ran through the city, was emptied into a vast lake prepared to receive its superfluous waters, and Cyrus marched his army into the city by the channel of the river.—Probably this prophecy, shown by Daniel to Cyrus, hastened the deliverance of the Jews.—Scott.

CHAP. XLV. COMMISSION OF CYRUS.—Ver. 1—6. The Lord here addresses Cyrus, as if present; he was the "anointed" of God, as he was set apart for this work, and as he was a type of Christ our Redeemer. Cyrus, being holden by the right hand, and strengthened by the Lord, would certainly be victorious. JEHOVAH subdued many other nations before him, previously to his conquest of Babylon: and he degraded or enfeebled many kings by him; Belshazzar especially was thus intimidated before he was destroyed. All the streets of Babylon, that led down on each side to the river, were secured by two-leaved brazen gates, which used to be shut every night: and when Cyrus marched his army into the channel of the river, he could not, without great danger and difficulty, have taken the city, had not the Babylonians, (engaged that night in feasting and mirth, and despising [illegible]) left these gates open. Thus God opened before him the two-leaved [illegible] that they should not be shut; [illegible] in his palace, and [illegible] him, through his Maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherds of the earth. [a]Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?

10 Woe unto him that saith unto his father, What begettest thou? or to the woman, What hast thou brought forth?

11 Thus saith the LORD, [c]the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker, [d]Ask me of things to come concerning my sons; and concerning the work of my hands command ye me.[s]

12 I have [h]made the earth, and created man upon it: I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens, and [k]all their host have I commanded.

13 I have [l]raised him up [m]in righteousness, and I will [†]direct all his ways: [n]he shall build my city, and he shall [o]let go my captives, not for [p]price nor reward, saith the LORD of hosts.

14 Thus saith the LORD, The labour of Egypt, and merchandise of Ethiopia, and of [r]the Sabeans, men of stature, shall come over unto thee, and they shall be thine: they shall come after thee; in chains they shall come over, and they shall fall down unto thee; they shall make supplication unto thee, saying, Surely God is in thee; [y]and there is none else; there is no God.

15 Verily thou art [z]a God that hidest thyself,[t] [a]O God of Israel, the Saviour.

16 They shall be ashamed, and also confounded, all of them: they shall go to confusion together that are makers of idols.

17 But [c]Israel shall be saved in the LORD with [d]an everlasting salvation: [e]ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end.

18 For thus saith the LORD [f]that created the heavens, God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, [g]he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: [h]I am the LORD, and there is none else.

19 I have not [i]spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth: I said not unto the seed of Jacob, [k]Seek ye me in vain: I the LORD [l]speak righteousness, I declare things that are right.

20 ¶ Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together, ye that are escaped of the nations: they have no knowledge that set up the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save them.

21 Tell ye, and bring them near; yea, let them take counsel together: who hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time? have not I the LORD? [z]and there is no God else besides me; [a]a just God and a Saviour: there is none besides me.

[a]BEL boweth down, Nebo [1]stoopeth; their idols were upon the beasts, and upon the cattle; your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the weary beast.

2 They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden, but [*]themselves are gone into captivity.

3 ¶ [c]Hearken unto me, O house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of Israel, which are borne by me from the belly, which are carried from the womb:

4 And [h]even to your old age I am he; and even to hoar hairs will I carry you: I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you.

5 ¶ To [k]whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like?

6 They lavish gold out of the bag, and weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith; and he maketh it a god: [m]they fall down, yea, they worship!

7 They bear him upon the shoulder, they carry him, and set him in his place, and he standeth; from his place shall he not remove; yea, [c]one shall cry unto him, yet can he not answer, nor save him out of his trouble.

8 Remember this, and shew yourselves men; bring it again to mind, O ye transgressors.

9 Remember the former things of old: for [s]I am God, and there is none else; I am God, [t]and there is none like me;

10 Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, [x]My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure:

11 Calling [2]a ravenous bird from the east, [a]the man [†]that executeth my counsel from a far country: yea, [b]I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it.

12 ¶ Hearken unto me, ye stout-hearted, [c]that are far from righteousness:

whole expedition, to remove every obstacle to his success: he broke before him the gates of brass and bars of iron, which obstructed his entrance into the various cities that he besieged; and he gave him immense treasures, that had long been reposited in dark and secret places, so that his spoil is said to have amounted to above a hundred and twenty millions sterling.—The exact fulfilment of these prophecies was intended to convince Cyrus that the God of Israel, who had called him by name, surnamed him his shepherd and his anointed, and girded him with strength, when he was an entire stranger to him, was indeed the only true God, Ezra i. 2. This was for the sake of Israel, his chosen servant, and in order to effect their release, and to make known to the most distant regions that there was no other God but JEHOVAH.—Scott.

OPEN REVELATION."—Ver. 19. "I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth." The Pagan deities delivered their oracles out of dens and caverns, with a low and hollow voice, and in ambiguous expressions; those that had familiar spirits whispered and muttered, chap. viii. 19; but God delivered his law from the top of mount Sinai, before all the thousands of Israel, in distinct, audible, and intelligent sounds; wisdom "cries in the chief places of concourse," Prov. i. 20, 21; viii. 1—3. The vision is written, and made plain, so that he who runs may read it; if it be obscure to any, they may thank themselves. Christ pleaded in his own defence what God says here: "In secret have I said nothing," John xviii. 20. "I said not unto the seed of Jacob," who consulted these oracles, and governed themselves by them, "Seek ye me in vain," as the false gods did to their worshippers, who sought "for the living to the dead," chap. viii. 19. This includes all the gracious answers that God gave to those who consulted him, his word is to them a faithful guide; and to those that prayed to him, the seed of Jacob are a praying people, it is the "generation of them that seek him," Ps. xxiv. 6.—Henry.

SUBMISSION TO GOD AND SALVATION.—Ver. 23—25. JEHOVAH here solemnly swears by himself, that he will irrevocably perform the righteous and faithful word which he had spoken, that every knee shall bow in adoration and submission to him; and that every tongue shall confess his name, and vow allegiance to him; "Surely," shall each of them say, "in JEHOVAH have I righteousness and strength;" declaring all their righteousness to be in Christ, the LORD our righteousness; all their holy dispositions and righteous actions to spring from his sanctifying grace; and all their safety, support, inward strength, and outward protection, to be only in and from him. To him, JEHOVAH-Jesus, men shall come from every nation for these blessings: all that are enraged at the honour paid to him, and that hate his cause, shall be put to shame; and all believers, the true seed of Israel, shall be accounted righteous, as one with him; and shall glory and rejoice in him as their whole salvation, their friend and portion; as made of God the Father unto them "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption;" 1 Chron. i. 30, 31; Phil. ii. 9—11. The passage seems immediately to predict the establishment of the divine Redeemer's kingdom on earth, the destruction of all implacable enemies to him from among men, and the most universal subjection to the gospel through all nations. But St. Paul also applies it to the future judgment, Rom. xiv. 9—12, when every man must give an account of himself to God, by appearing before the tribunal of Christ. Then all will allow his right to be their King and Judge; his enemies will be put to shame, and perish; his people shall be declared righteous, and shall glory in him as their God and Saviour for ever.—Bishop Lowth translates the words rendered in our version, "a just God and a Saviour," "a God that uttereth truth, and granteth salvation." Yet he assigns no reason for deviating so materially from the literal, general, and almost universal meaning of the words, "a just God and a Saviour." A God, infinite in justice, and infinite in mercy, is the God of revelation, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; and by this especially he is distinguished, not only from the idols of the heathen, but also from the imaginary supreme Being of infidel philosophers of every description. It may be questioned whether the word tzaddik ever signifies simply uttereth truth; though it sometimes means faithfulness, or performing engagements which were originally entered into of free grace; for the fulfilling of an engagement is an act of justice, whatever induced the person to make it; and justice seems ultimately, in all cases, the meaning of the original word.—"Here God confirms by an oath the truth of what was foretold in the twenty-second verse, that the time should certainly come, when all the world shall give glory to him, by paying him solemn worship, and by swearing or professing allegiance to him. What the prophet speaks in the person of God is applied by St. Paul to Christ; that is to the second person of the blessed Trinity. Many more such instances might be given; and all of them are plain proofs of the divinity of Christ; and that the prophets of the Old Testament had all along an eye to the times of the New, and spoke of the Messiah as God. This likewise, ver. 24, is very applicable to Christ, who is called "The LORD our Righteousness," and is made unto us righteousness. To be justified, is a term taken from the forms of law, and signifies to be acquitted, or pronounced innocent, and come off victorious in a cause." [Lowth.]—Scott.

CHAP. XLVI. HELPLESSNESS OF IDOLS.—Ver. 1, Bel and Nebo were two celebrated idols of Babylon; some make Bel to be a contraction of Belus, others rather think not, but that it was Belus, one of their first kings, who, after his death, was deified. Bel was a deified prince, so (some think) Nebo was a deified prophet; or as [illegible] fies; so that Bel and Nebo were [illegible]

CHAP. XLVII.

God's judgments upon Babylon and Chaldea, 1, for their unmercifulness, 6, and pride, shall be irresistible, 7.

COME down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon,[1] sit on the ground: [d]there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for [e]thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.

2 Take the millstones, and grind meal: uncover thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.

3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen: [h]I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

4 As for [i]our Redeemer, the LORD of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

5 Sit thou silent, and get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms.

6 I was [m]wroth with my people; [n]I have polluted mine inheritance, and given them into thine hand: [o]thou didst shew them no mercy; upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke.

7 And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever:[2] so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst remember the latter end of it.

8 Therefore hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly; that sayest in thine heart, [t]I am, and none else besides me; [u]I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children:

9 But [x]these two things shall come to thee in a moment, in one day, the loss of children, and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection, [a]for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.

10 For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness: thou hast said, None seeth me. [d]Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath *perverted thee; and thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else besides me.

11 Therefore shall evil come upon thee; [f]thou shalt not know †from whence it riseth: and mischief shall fall upon thee; thou shalt not be able to ‡put it off: and desolation shall come upon thee suddenly, which thou shalt not know.

12 ¶ Stand now with thine enchantments,[3] and with the multitude of thy sorceries, wherein thou hast laboured from thy youth; if so be thou shalt be able to profit, if so be thou mayest prevail.

God, to convince the people of their obstinacy, revealeth his prophecies, 1; he exhorteth them to obedience, 12.

HEAR ye this, O house of Jacob,[1] [a]which are called by the name of Israel, and are [b]come forth out of the waters of Judah, [c]which swear by the name of the LORD, and [d]make mention of the God of Israel, but not in truth, nor in righteousness.

2 For they call themselves of the holy city, [g]and stay themselves upon the God of Israel, [h]The LORD of hosts is his name.

3 I have [i]declared the former things from the beginning: and they went forth out of my mouth, and I shewed them; I did them suddenly, and they came to pass.

4 Because [l]I knew that thou art *obstinate, [m]and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass;

6 Thou hast heard, see all this; and will not ye declare it? I have shewed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them.

7 They are created now, and not from the beginning; even before the day when thou heardest them not: lest thou shouldest say, Behold, I knew them.

8 Yea, thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time that [u]thine ear was not opened: for I knew that thou wouldest deal very treacherously, and wast called [y]a transgressor from the womb.

9 ¶ For my name's sake will I [a]defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off.

and Paul passed at Lystra for Jupiter and Mercury. The names of these idols were taken into the names of their princes; Bel into Belshazzar's, Nebo into Nebuchadnezzar's and Nebuzaradan's, &c. These gods they had long worshipped, and in their revels praised them for their success, (as appears, Dan. v. 4,) and they insulted over Israel, as if Bel and Nebo were too hard for Jehovah, and should detain them in captivity in defiance of their God. Now that this might be no discouragement to the poor captives, God here tells them what shall become of these idols, which they threaten them with. When Cyrus takes Babylon, down go the idols. It was usual then with conquerors to destroy the gods of the places and people they conquered, and to put the gods of their own nation in the room of them, chap. xxxvii. 19. Cyrus will do so; and then Bel and Nebo, that were set up on high, and looked great, bold, and erect, stoop and bow down at the feet of the soldiers that plunder their temples. And because there is a great deal of gold and silver upon them, which was intended to adorn them, but serves to expose them, they carry them away with the rest of the spoil; the carriers' horses or mules are laden with them, and their other idols, to be sent, among other lumber, (for so it seems they accounted them rather than treasure,) into Persia. So far they are from being able to support their worshippers, that they are themselves a heavy load in the waggons, and a burthen to the weary beast. The idols cannot help one another; ver. 2. "They stoop, they bow down together," they are all alike, tottering things, and their day is come to fall; their worshipper cannot help them; they could not deliver the burthen out of the enemies' hand, but themselves (both the idols and the idolaters) are gone into captivity.—Henry.

CHAP. XLVII. OVERTHROW OF BABYLON.—Ver. 1—10. Babylon, (as the capital of the Chaldean empire, which succeeded to the Assyrian,) had never been subdued before Cyrus took it. The city is therefore represented under the emblem of a fair virgin in great distress, who is called the daughter of Babylon, or of the Chaldeans. Instead of being seated as heretofore, upon a throne, ruling over other cities and nations, and being called tender and delicate, as exempted from hardships and calamities; she was now to come down, and sit upon the bare ground, and as an abject slave to grind corn with those hand-mills that were in use before the invention of water-mills and wind-mills, which was the lowest and most laborious of menial services. Nay, she must be [illegible] with disheveled locks, and almost naked, before the victor, in order [illegible] driven like herds of cattle; and be [illegible] indecent and inhuman manner in [illegible] the deep-guile is carried [illegible] as the wantonness of a man, who might be resisted or appeased, but to take righteous vengeance on her as the Almighty God. Or, "I will not admit man to intercede for her;" as some explain the cause, which is rather obscure. Notwithstanding these predictions against Babylon, the king and his nobles deemed their dominion and prosperity firmly and permanently established; they laid neither their own crimes nor the words of God to heart, nor considered what the end of their greatness would be. The inhabitants were given up to pleasures and dissipation; and arrogantly concluded that no city or empire ever had been, was, or would be, like their own; and they expressed this sentiment in language similar to that, by which JEHOVAH declared his own eternal Deity, chap. xlv. 5, 6.—The loss of empire, and the destruction of the inhabitants, are to ruling cities like widowhood, and loss of children. Babylon thought herself perfectly secure from these afflictions: but the Lord declared, that they would come upon her in one day, in a moment, most suddenly, and in their perfection; for, or notwithstanding, the multitude of her sorceries and enchantments. The Chaldeans trusted much to these practices, and disregarded the all-seeing eye of Israel's God; but the permanent prosperity, with which she was thus flattered, would not be vouchsafed her. Ver. 11. Neither the politicians nor sorcerers of Babylon could discover from what quarter evil would come upon them; nor when it approached could they retard it: nay, at last it would come on them suddenly, when they had no apprehension of it.—Cyrus surprised the city, when the inhabitants were all asleep, or in their drunken revels, and entirely without fear of the impending ruin.—Scott.

CHAP. XLVIII. HOW GOD HUMBLES IDOLATERS.—Ver. 5. 1. God by his prophets told his people beforehand of their deliverance, lest they should attribute the doing of it to their idols. Thus he saw it necessary to secure the glory of that to himself, which otherwise would have been given by some of them to their graven images; "I spake of it," (says God,) "lest thou shouldst say, Mine idol has done it, or has commanded it to be done." There were those that would be apt to say so, and so would be confirmed in their idolatry by that which was intended to cure them of it. But they would now be for ever precluded from saying this; for if the idols had done it, the prophets of the idols would have foretold it; but the prophet of the Lord having foretold it, it was no doubt the power of the Lord that effected it. 2. God foretold it by his prophets, lest they should assume the foresight of it to themselves. Those that were not so profane as to have ascribed the thing itself to [illegible] were yet so presumptuous as to [illegible] own sagacity [illegible]

12 ¶ Hearken unto me, O Jacob, and Israel, my called; [l] I am he; I am the first, I also am the last.

13 Mine [k] hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, [l] and my [‡] right hand hath spanned the heavens: [m] when I call unto them, they stand up together.

14 All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? [o] The LORD hath loved him: he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans.

Christ being sent to the Jews, complaineth of them, 1: He is sent to the Gentiles, 5. God's love to the church, 13.

LISTEN, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far; [c] The LORD hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.

2 And [d] he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me;

3 And said unto me, [s] Thou art my servant,[1] O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.

4 Then I said, I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain; yet surely my judgment is with the LORD, and my * work with my God.

5 ¶ And now, saith the LORD that formed me from the womb to be his servant, to bring Jacob again to him, † Though [n] Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the LORD, and my God shall be my strength.

6 And he said, [‡] It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the [§] preserved of Israel: [q] I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, [r] that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth.

7 Thus saith the LORD, [s] the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, [t] to him whom man despiseth,[2] to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a servant of rulers, [u] kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the LORD that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, [x] and he shall choose thee.

8 Thus saith the LORD, [y] In an acceptable time have I heard thee,[3] [z] and in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I will preserve thee, and [a] give thee for a covenant of the people, to * establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages:

9 That thou mayest say [d] to the prisoners, Go forth: [e] to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves: [f] they shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all [g] high places.

10 They shall not hunger nor thirst; [i] neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for [k] he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them.

11 And [l] I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted.

12 Behold, [m] these shall come from far; and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.[4]

13 ¶ Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains: for the LORD hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted.

14 But Zion said, The LORD hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.

was no more than they expected, and they knew it would come to this. To anticipate this, and that this boasting might for ever be excluded, God told them of it before the day, when as yet they dreamed not of it. God has said and done enough to prevent men's boastings of themselves, and that "no flesh may glory in his presence," which, if it have not the intended effect, will aggravate the sin and ruin of the proud; and, sooner or later, "every mouth shall be stopped, and all flesh shall become silent before God."—Henry.

MISSION OF CHRIST.—Ver. 16. There is some difficulty in ascertaining the speaker in this verse; but if the prophet be supposed to speak, it must be as a type of the elect servant of JEHOVAH, before predicted, chap. xlii. 1. From the opening of his ministry, Isaiah had publicly spoken of those things that were coming to pass, and events had accorded to his predictions; he had from the first been at hand to declare the will of the Lord; and now the Lord God and his Spirit had sent him to predict the captivity, with their deliverance from it; and it behoved them to come near and attend to his words. But this seems not by any means to come up to the energy and full meaning of the passage. The Word, that "was in the beginning with God, and was God," and by whom the mind and will of God have ever been declared to men, evidently speaks in this place. He had ever addressed the nation in the most open manner, from the time that he appeared to Moses in the bush, and called himself, I AM THAT I AM: and he was ever present with Israel as their Lord and Redeemer. And now the Father and his Spirit had sent him to effect their predicted deliverance: or the Lord God had sent him and his Spirit; for so the words may be read, and the language accords better to the ordinary style of Scripture. The deliverance from Babylon seems to be primarily intended, yet as shadowing forth the incarnation of Christ, and the pouring out of the Spirit, to apply his purchased redemption to the souls of men.—Scott.

CHAP. XLIX. CHRIST—SAVIOUR BOTH OF JEW AND GENTILE.—Ver. 5, 6. JEHOVAH, in the person of the Father, here addresses the Son, as become incarnate, (that is, in the Divine purpose and prescience.) The primary object of his undertaking was to bring Jacob again to the true service and worship of God. Accordingly, the personal ministry of Christ and the first labours of his apostles, were confined to the Jews: and their national rejection of Christ was the occasion of the apostles at length turning to the Gentiles. So that it was the settled plan of God, made known ages before, that though Israel were not gathered to the promised Messiah, as his subjects and disciples, yet should he be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and be glorified by him; and God would be his strength to render his gospel successful. Thus when Christ was about to ascend into heaven, he said to his disciples, "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth. Go ye, preach the gospel to all nations." So that, compared with the full effects of his mediatory work, the conversion of a small remnant of the Jews, who were preserved from their national unbelief, would be a small matter: nay, the conversion of the whole nation would have been a light thing; for he was given to be the great and all-sufficient source of spiritual knowledge and illumination, and the Author of eternal salvation to the nations of the earth in general.—Scott.

GOD'S UNCEASING LOVE.—Ver. 14—17. God has a tender affection for his church and people. In answer to Zion's fears, God speaks as one concerned for his own glory; he takes himself to be reflected upon, if Zion says, "The Lord has forsaken me;" and he will clear himself. As one concerned also for his people's comfort, he would not have them droop and be discouraged, and give way to any uneasy thoughts. You think that I have forgotten you; "can a woman forget her sucking child?" First, It is not likely that she should. A "woman," whose honour it is to be of the tender sex as well as the fair one, cannot but have compassion for a child, which, being both harmless and helpless, is a proper object of compassion. A mother, especially, cannot but be concerned for her own child, for it is her own, a piece of herself, and very lately one with her. A nursing mother, most of all, cannot but be tender of her sucking child; her own breasts will soon put her in mind of it, if she should forget it. But, Secondly, It is possible that she may forget. A woman may perhaps be so unhappy as not to be able to remember her sucking child, she may be sick and dying, and going to the land of forgetfulness; or, she may be so unnatural as not to have "compassion on the son of her womb," as those who, to conceal their shame, are the death of their children as soon as they are their life. Lam. iv. 10; Deut. xxviii. 57. But, says God, "I will not forget thee." Note, God's compassions to his people infinitely exceed those of the tenderest parents toward their children. What are the affections of nature to those of the God of nature!

INGATHERING OF THE GENTILES.—Ver. 22. The Jews were cast off, among whom it was expected that the church should be built up; but God will "sow it to himself in the earth," and from thence will reap a plentiful crop, Hos. ii. 23. Observe, 1. How the Gentiles shall be called in; God will "lift up his hand to them," to invite or beckon them, having all the day stretched it out in vain to the Jews, chap. lxv. 2. Or it denotes the exerting of an almighty power, that of his Spirit and grace, to compel them to come in, to make them willing. And he will "set up his standard to them," the preaching of the everlasting gospel, to which they shall gather, and under which they shall list themselves. 2. How they shall come; "They shall bring thy sons in their arms." They shall assist the sons of Zion, which are found among them, in their return to their own country, and shall forward them with as much tenderness as ever any parent carried a child that was 5 ¶ The Lord GOD hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back.

6 I [p]gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them [q]that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting.[2]

7 ¶ For the Lord GOD will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed.

8 He is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me? let us stand together: who is *mine adversary? let him come near to me.

9 Behold, the Lord GOD will help me; who is he that shall condemn me? lo, [x]they all shall wax old as a garment; the moth shall eat them up.

10 ¶ Who is among you that feareth the LORD, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, [a]that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? [b]let him trust in the name of the LORD, and stay upon his God.

11 Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks: [d]walk in the light of your fire,[3] and in the sparks that ye have kindled. [e]This shall ye have of mine hand; [f]ye shall lie down in sorrow.

weak and helpless. God may raise up friends for returning Israelites, even among Gentiles; "the earth helped the woman," Rev. xii. 16. Or, "When they come themselves, they shall bring their children, and make them thy children;" compare chap. lx. 4. "Dost thou ask, 'Who has begotten and brought up these?' Know, that they were begotten and brought up among the Gentiles, but they are now brought into thy family." Let all that are concerned about young converts, and young beginners in religion, learn hence to deal very tenderly and carefully with them, as Christ does with the lambs, whom he "gathers with his arms, and carries in his bosom."—Henry.

KINGS—NURSING FATHERS.—Ver. 22, 23. JEHOVAH here further explains how this increase of Zion's family would be effected. By the death of Christ and the preaching of the gospel, his hand was lifted up to summon the nations, and his standard erected for them to resort to. The numerous converts made from among the Gentiles are represented under the idea of many nations at once bringing Zion's sons and daughters home to her, with the greatest care and tenderness; especially as they employed their ability to promote the cause of the gospel. Even kings would become foster-fathers, and queens nursing mothers to the children of Zion, accounting it their honour and privilege to use their influence and authority to promote the success of the gospel; rendering the most profound respect to the church; not attempting to have dominion over her faith, but subserving her comfort and prosperity, and showing her honour for the Lord's sake, proportioned to the contempt and indignity with which she had been treated. Then would it appear more than ever, that the immutable truth, power, and love of JEHOVAH were engaged in behalf of his people; and that they who wait for him shall never be put to shame.—Scott.

CHAP. L. THE TONGUE OF THE LEARNED.—Ver. 4. Isaiah, as a prophet, was qualified for the work to which he was called, so were the rest of God's prophets, and others whom he employed as his messengers; but Christ was anointed with the Spirit above his fellows. To make the man of God perfect, he has, 1. The tongue of the learned, to know how to give instruction, how to "speak a word in season to him that is weary." God, who made man's mouth, gave Moses the tongue of the learned, to speak for the terror and conviction of Pharaoh, Exod. iv. 11, 12. He gave to Christ the tongue of the learned, to speak a word in season for the comfort of those that are weary and heavy-laden under the burthen of sin, Matt. xi. 28. "Grace was poured into his lips," and they are said to "drop sweet-swelling myrrh." See what is the best learning of a minister, to know how to comfort troubled consciences, and to speak pertinently, properly, and plainly, to the various cases of poor souls. An ability to do this is God's gift, and it is one of the best gifts, which we should covet earnestly. Let us repose ourselves in the many comfortable words which Christ has spoken to the weary. 2. The ear of the learned, to receive instruction. Prophets have as much need of this as of the tongue of the learned; for they must deliver what they are taught, and no other; must hear the word from God's mouth diligently and attentively, that they may speak it exactly, Ezek. iii. 17. Christ himself received, that he might give. None must undertake to be teachers who have not first been learners; Christ's apostles were first disciples; scribes instructed unto the kingdom of heaven," Matt. xiii. 52. Nor is it enough to hear, but we must hear as the learned, hear and understand, hear and remember, hear as those that would learn by what we hear. Our case calls for continual fresh supplies of divine grace, to free us from the dulness we contract daily. The morning, when our spirits are most lively, is a proper time for communion with God; then we are in the best frame, both to speak to him, "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning," and to hear from him; the people came "early in the morning" to hear Christ in the temple, Luke xxi. 38. For it seems his were morning lectures, and it is God that wakens us morning by morning; if we do any thing to purpose in his service, it is he who, as our Master, calls us up; we should dose perpetually, if he did not waken us morning by morning. Ver. 5, 6. One would think that he who was commissioned and qualified to speak comfort to the weary, should meet with no difficulty in his work, but universal acceptance: it is, however, quite otherwise; he has both hard work to do, and hard usage to undergo; and here he tells us with what undaunted constancy he went through with it. We have no reason to question but that the prophet Isaiah went on resolutely in the work to which God had called him, though we read not of his undergoing any such hardships as are here supposed; but we are sure it was abundantly verified in Jesus Christ.—Henry.

CHAP. LI. HUMILITY.—Ver. 12. "Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn;" (the idolatrous family in Ur of the Chaldees, out of which Abraham was taken, the generation of slaves which the heads and fathers of their tribes were in Egypt;) "look unto the 'hole of the pit out of which ye are digged,' as clay, when God formed you into a people." Note, It is good for those that are privileged by a new birth to consider what they were by their first birth: how they were "conceived in iniquity, and shapen in sin." That which is "born of the flesh, is flesh:" how hard was that rock out of which we were hewn, unapt to receive impressions; and how miserable "the hole of that pit out of which we were digged!" The consideration should fill us with low thoughts of ourselves, and high thoughts of divine grace. Those that are now advanced, would do well to remember how low they began; ver. 2, "'Look unto Abraham your father,' the father of all the

3 For [s]the LORD shall comfort Zion: he will comfort [h]all her waste places; and he will [i]make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert [k]like the garden of the LORD; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.

4 ¶ Hearken unto me, my people; and give ear unto me, O my nation: for [n]a law shall proceed from me, and [o]I will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people.

5 My [p]righteousness is near; [q]my salvation is gone forth, and [r]mine arms shall judge the people: [s]the isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust.

6 Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath; for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner: [1] but [x]my salvation shall be for ever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished.

7 ¶ Hearken unto me, [z]ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law; [b]fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

8 For [c]the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool: but [d]my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation.

9 ¶ Awake, awake, [f]put on strength, [g]O arm of the LORD; awake, as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it that hath cut Rahab,[2] and wounded the dragon?

10 Art thou not it which hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?

11 Therefore [m]the redeemed of the LORD shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head: they shall obtain gladness and joy, [o]and sorrow and mourning shall flee away.

12 ¶ I, even [p]I, am he that comforteth you: who art thou, that thou shouldest be afraid of a man that shall die, and of [r]the son of man, which shall be made as grass;

13 And [s]forgettest the LORD thy Maker, [t]that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and hast feared continually every day, because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he [*]were ready to destroy? and [y]where is the fury of the oppressor?

14 The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed,[3] and that he should not [a]die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail.

15 But I am the LORD thy God that divided the sea, whose waves roared: The LORD of hosts is his name.

faithful, of all that follow after the righteousness of faith as he did, Rom. iv. 11; "and unto Sarah that bare you," and whose daughters you all are as long as you do well; think how Abraham was called alone, and yet was blessed and multiplied; and let that encourage you to depend upon the promise of God, even then when a sentence of death seems to be upon all the means that lead to the performance of it.

THE CHURCH'S PLEA IN PRAYER.—Ver. 9. The church sees her case bad, her enemies many and mighty, her friends few and feeble; and therefore she depends purely upon the strength of God's arm for her relief; "'Awake as in the ancient days,' do for us now as thou didst for our fathers formerly, repeat 'the wonders they told us of.'" Judg. vi. 13. And as they enforce this prayer, they plead, 1. Precedents, the experience of their ancestors, and the great things God had done for them; "Let the arm of the Lord be made bare on our behalf, for it has done great things formerly in defence of the same cause, and we are sure it is neither shortened nor weakened: it did wonders against the Egyptians, who enslaved and oppressed God's son, his first-born; it cut Rahab to pieces with one direful plague after another; and wounded Pharaoh the Dragon, the Leviathan, (as he is called, Ps. lxxxiv. 13, 14,) it gave him his death's wound. It did wonders for Israel; it 'dried up the sea,' even 'the waters of the great deep,' as far as was requisite to open a way through the sea for 'the ransomed to pass over,'" ver. 10. God is never at a loss for a way to accomplish his purposes concerning his people, but will either find one, or make one. Past experiences, as they are great supports to faith and hope, so they are good pleas in prayer, "Thou hast, wilt thou not?" Ps. lxxxv. 1—6. 2. They plead promises; ver. 11, "And the redeemed of the Lord shall return;" (as it may be supplied) "Thou hast said, They shall:" referring to chap. xxxv. 10, where we find this promise, that "the redeemed of the Lord," when they are released out of their captivity in Babylon, "shall come with singing unto Zion." Sinners, when they are brought out of the slavery of sin into the glorious liberty of God's children, may come singing, as a bird got loose out of the cage. The souls of believers, when they are delivered out of the prison of the body, come to the heavenly Zion with singing.—Henry.

COMFORT TO THE PERSECUTED.—Ver. 17—23. The Lord here seems to address the Jews, in their present dispersions. Jerusalem, the mother of that people, had indeed drunk the cup of the Lord's fury, and wrung out the very dregs of it. The terrible effects of his indignation against that devoted city, are represented by those of a poisoned or medicated potion, which a criminal was obliged to drink off, and which produced rage, despair, and anguish, or trembling and fainting. In this condition, none of her children were at hand, or able, to lead, uphold, or take care of her. That is, the most desolating, and stupendous judgments would be poured out upon Jerusalem, by pestilence, discord, famine, and the Roman sword; none of the neighbours would sympathise with the poor Jews, or attempt to comfort them; but would rather insult over and enhance their miseries. Nor would they be able to help themselves or defend their city, but they would lie fainting and dying by multitudes at the head of every street; and, continuing unhumbled, and untamed, they would resemble the wild bull, when taken in the hunter's toils, furiously struggling to extricate himself, and only entangling himself the more. Thus would they suffer by the furious rebuke of the Lord, for rejecting and crucifying their promised Messiah.—This seems to relate immediately to the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the miseries that attended that awful event. But the calamities of the Jews continue to this day, and they yet remain unhumbled under them; which circumstance shows that they, and not persecuted Christians, are here primarily intended.—"'Two things,' that is, desolation by famine, and destruction by the sword." [Bp. Lowth.]—The afflicted Jews, who have so long been made drunken by temporal and spiritual judgments, "more than with wine," or in a more stupifying manner, are here encouraged to expect deliverance. Mercy is yet in store for the nation for their fathers' sake. The Lord will yet plead their cause, and punish their oppressors, who have so long treated them with equal cruelty and indignity; trampling them down as the mire in the streets, and attempting to domineer over their souls as well as their bodies.—It is well known, that in those countries where the inquisition is established, numbers of Jews dissemble their religion, to escape its cruelties; yet they abjectly submit to be thus trampled on, for gain by traffic there; and this forms a remarkable accomplishment of the prophecy. —Scott.

CHAP. LII. WELCOME TO THE HERALDS OF THE CROSS.—Ver. 8—11. "'How beautiful upon the mountains,' the mountains round about Jerusalem, over which these messengers are seen coming at a distance, 'how beautiful are their feet,' when it is known what tidings they bring!" It is not meant so much of the common posts, or the messengers sent express by the government to disperse the proclamation, but rather of some of the Jews themselves, who, being at the fountain-head of intelligence, had early notice of it, and immediately went themselves, or sent their own messengers, to all parts, to disperse the news, and even to Jerusalem itself, to tell the few who remained there that their brethren would be with them shortly, for it is published not merely as matter of news, but as a proof that Zion's God reigns, for in that language it is published; they say unto Zion, "Thy God reigns." Those who bring the tidings of peace and salvation, that Cyrus has given orders for the release of the Jews, tidings which were so long expected by them that waited for the consolation of Israel, those good tidings (so the original

8 He was taken *from prison and from judgment: and ˢwho shall declare his generation?[2] for he was ᵗcut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was †he stricken.

9 And he ᵘmade his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his ‡death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

10 ¶ Yet it ʸpleased the LORD to bruise him; ᶻhe hath put him to grief: §when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, ᵇhe shall see his seed, ᶜhe shall prolong his days, and ᵈthe pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand.

11 He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: ᶠby his knowledge[3] shall ᵍmy righteous servant ʰjustify many; ⁱfor he shall bear their iniquities.

12 Therefore ᵏwill I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath ⁱpoured out his soul unto death: ᵐand he was numbered with the transgressors; and ⁿhe bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.

SING, O barren,[1] thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: °for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the LORD.

2 ᵈEnlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes:

reads it, without the tautology of our translation, "good tidings of good,") they put this construction upon it, "O Zion, thy God reigns." Note, When bad news is abroad, this is good news, and when good news is abroad, this is the best news, that Zion's God reigns; that God is Zion's God in covenant with her, and as such he reigns, Ps. cxlvi. 10; Zech. ix. 9. "The Lord has founded Zion," chap. xiv. 32. All events have their rise in the disposals of the kingdom of his providence, and their tendency to the advancement of the kingdom of his grace. This must be applied to the preaching of the gospel, which is a proclamation of peace and salvation; it is gospel indeed, good news, glad tidings, tidings of victory over our spiritual enemies, and liberty from our spiritual bondage. The good news is, that the Lord Jesus reigns, and all power is given to him. Christ himself brought these tidings first, Luke iv. 18; Heb. ii. 3, and of him the text speaks; "How beautiful are his feet;" his feet that were nailed to the cross, how beautiful upon mount Calvary; his feet when he came "leaping upon the mountains," Cant. ii. 8. How beautiful were they to those who knew his voice, and knew it to be the voice of their Beloved. His ministers proclaim these good tidings; they ought to keep their feet clean from the pollutions of the world, and then they ought to be beautiful in the eyes of those to whom they are sent, who sit at their feet, or rather at Christ's, in them, to hear his word. They must be "esteemed in love" for "their work's sake," 1 Thes. v. 13. For their message-sake, which is well worthy of all acceptation.—Henry.

GOD'S SERVANT—THE MESSIAH.—Ver. 13—15. The Lord here speaks of his servant the Messiah, the Alpha and Omega, in all these transactions, and in every thing else. He would fulfil his whole undertaking with consummate wisdom; and his exaltation in heaven and his glory on earth also, would be very high. Yet his previous abasement would be proportionable: many would behold his sufferings with astonishment, and be offended by them. His visage would be marred by sorrow and shame, with wounds and blood, by being spit upon, and crowned with thorns, and treated with indignity, more than any man's ever was; and he would appear more base than any of the human species; yet he would in consequence "sprinkle many nations," alluding to the ceremonial law, with his atoning blood, and by the pouring out of his Spirit, as purifying water, of which baptism would be the outward and visible sign. Opposing kings would at length be silenced by fear and astonishment, or won over to the faith; for they would see and consider such things as they before had not heard of, or been acquainted with.—Scott.

CHAP. LIII. MESSIAH SPURNED.—Ver. 2—4. He was the son of a poor unnoticed virgin, and the reputed son of a carpenter, who were not generally known to be descended from David: he was brought up at Nazareth, and his birth at Bethlehem had either been unnoticed, or was forgotten; he grew up and lived a long time in obscurity, probably working as a carpenter; he then appeared as a poor man, "who had not where to lay his head," and attended by a few fishermen; and he was an itinerant teacher, unauthorised by the priests and scribes. Thus, instead of a plant of renown, he grew up "before God," in such a manner, that he appeared as a tender shoot, whose root was in a dry ground, where it was never likely to come to any thing. So that, notwithstanding the wisdom and grace of his words, the power of his miracles, and the holy beauty of his character, the Jews could find no form or comeliness in him, for which they should desire and welcome him as their Messiah. He was therefore generally despised and rejected by them; this contempt and reproach further confirmed the prejudices of the people against him; and every thing concurred in rendering him a man of sorrows and intimately acquainted with grief.

MESSIAH SLAIN AND BURIED.—Ver. 7—10. "A grave was appointed for him with the wicked; but he was with the rich at his death," (or in his tomb, or elevated place, as the word regularly derived from another root may mean:) "because he," &c. As our Lord was crucified between two thieves, it was doubtless intended that he should be buried with them. Thus "his grave was appointed with the wicked;" but Joseph of Arimathea came and asked for his body, and Pilate, convinced that he had committed no crime, readily granted Joseph's request. Thus "he was with the rich at his death," that is, till his resurrection: and this took place, contrary to the intention of his enemies, "'because' he had done no violence," &c.; for Joseph would scarcely have requested, and probably Pilate would not have consented, to have delivered up the body of a crucified malefactor.—The designed obscurity of the prophecy renders its exact accomplishment the more remarkable. Some connect the latter clause with what follows, and render it, "Though he had done, &c.; yet it pleased the LORD," he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth; so that Pilate, when he delivered him to be crucified, declared that he found no fault in him; yet it pleased the Lord himself to bruise him; the Father, who was well pleased in him, yet took pleasure in bruising him with anguish of spirit, because this was for the display of his own glory, and the honour of his law. So that he not only permitted his enemies cruelly to insult and torment him, but he put him to grief by his own hand, and made "his soul exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." Thus his soul, or life, was made an offering for sin; not only was his blood shed, as that of the sacrifices used to be, but he endured the feeling of the wrath of God due to our sins, which the fire from heaven, consuming on the altar the inwards or bodies of the sacrifices,

3 For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; [f]and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and [g]make the desolate cities[2] to be inhabited.

4 ¶ Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed: neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame: for [i]thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more.

5 For [k]thy Maker is thine husband; [s]The LORD of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel; [m]The God of the whole earth shall he be called.

6 For the LORD hath called thee as a woman forsaken, and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God.

7 For [p]a small moment have I forsaken thee; but [q]with great mercies will I gather thee.

8 In a little wrath [r]I hid my face from thee for a moment; [t]but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the LORD thy Redeemer.

9 For this is as [x]the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.

10 For [y]the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall [z]the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the LORD [a]that hath mercy on thee.

11 ¶ O [b]thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted! behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with [c]sapphires.

12 And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

13 And [d]all thy children shall be taught of the LORD; and great shall be the peace of thy children.

14 In [i]righteousness shalt thou be established: thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.

15 ¶ Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by me: whosoever shall gather together against thee, shall fall for thy sake.

16 Behold, I have created the smith[4] that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy.

17 ¶ No [p]weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and [q]every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment, thou shalt condemn. This is [r]the heritage of the servants of the LORD; and their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD.

Invitations to partake freely of spiritual blessings, with expostulations and promises, 1. Christ proposed to mankind, as he whom the nations would obey, 4. A call to repentance, with a promise of abundant mercy; for God's ways are not like man's, 6. The success of the gospel, the joy of believers, and the happy change which would thus take place, 10.

HO, [b]every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money: come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk [f]without money, and without price.

2 Wherefore [g]do ye [*]spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? [h]hearken diligently unto me, and [l]eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.

3 Incline your ear, and [l]come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; [n]and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even [o]the sure mercies of David.

4 Behold, [p]I have given him for a witness[1] to the people, [q]a leader and commander to the people.

5 Behold, [r]thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not; and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee, because of the LORD thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; [t]for he hath glorified thee.

6 ¶ [s]Seek ye the LORD while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near:

7 Let [t]the wicked forsake his way, and the [†]unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the LORD, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, [a]for he will [‡]abundantly pardon.

8 ¶ For [b]my thoughts[2] are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the LORD.

9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

10 For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater;

11 So [f]shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void; but [g]it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

typified. In consequence of this, it was foretold that He would see a numerous spiritual offspring, the fruit of all his toil and pain.

MESSIAH TRIUMPHANT.—Ver. 11. JEHOVAH here declares that Christ should see that abundant effect of his agonies and death, "the travail of his soul," that he would be fully satisfied and rejoice in it. His gospel would make known his person, love, righteousness, atonement, and salvation; and thus, "by the knowledge of him," the Messiah "would justify many," "having borne their sins in his own body on the tree." Because he had poured out his soul unto death, and, though perfectly righteous, had submitted to be numbered with transgressors or malefactors, and to bear the sins of many, that he might become their intercessor: therefore the Father would surely grant unto him a large multitude of sinners to be saved and ruled by him, who before were the slaves of Satan, and must have continued to belong to that potent enemy of God and man; and he should have all power in heaven and earth, to enable him to rescue all that had been given to him, and to complete their salvation.—This prophecy, delivered at least seven hundred years before the birth of Christ, and coinciding so exactly with the history of his sufferings and death; the reasons of them, as recorded and assigned in the New Testament, and the effect of them, as it hath been evidently produced for almost eighteen hundred years, constitutes a most unanswerable demonstration of the truth of the Scriptures.—Scott.

CHAP. LIV. SPIRITUAL NUPTIALS.—Ver. 5. "Thy Maker is thy husband." Believers are said to be married to Christ, that they may "bring forth fruit unto God;" Rom. vii. 4, so the church is married to him, that she may bear and bring up a holy seed to God, that shall be accounted to him for a generation. Jesus Christ is the church's Maker, by whom she is formed into a people; her Redeemer, by whom she is brought out of captivity, the bondage of sin, the worst of slaveries. This is he that espoused her to himself; and, 1. He is "the Lord of hosts," who has an irresistible power, an absolute sovereignty, and an universal dominion! Kings, who are lords of some hosts, find there are others, who are lords of other hosts, as many and mighty as theirs; but God is the Lord of "all" hosts. 2. He is "the Holy One of Israel," the same that presided in the affairs of the Old-Testament church, and was the Mediator of the covenant made with it. The promises made to the New-Testament Israel, are as rich and sure as those made to the Old Testament Israel; for he that is our Redeemer, is the Holy One of Israel. 3. He is, and shall be called, "the Lord of the whole earth," as God, and as Mediator, for he is the Heir of all things; but "then" he shall be called so, when the ends of the earth shall be made to see his salvation, when all the earth shall own him their God, and have an interest in him.—Henry.

PROMISES TO THE CHURCH.—Ver. 11—17. The church is assured that all will end well. Instead of her mean uncomfortable tent, the Lord promises to build her a most glorious city or palace, whose foundations, windows, walls, and towers, should be formed of precious stones, most beautiful and durable. These are emblems of the light, purity, and prosperity, which the church on earth shall at length enjoy, resembling those of heaven, Rev. xxi. 18—22. All her children shall be taught of the LORD, by his Spirit, and according to his word. This may be understood of the true Israel, as distinguished from Israel according to the flesh. This may be considered as a general promise to the church, through successive ages. Many assailants would combine against her; but, the Lord being on her side, they would be destroyed for her sake; or, as some understand the clause, "shall come over to thy side." He is the creator of those that forge weapons of war, and of the great destroyers of mankind; both are in his hands, and employed or restrained at his pleasure: and he would take care, that no weapons formed against his church should prosper, and that all her accusers and enemies should be condemned. The security and final victory are to be considered as the heritage of each of the faithful servants of the Lord: while the righteousness, in which they are justified, and the grace by which they are sanctified, are both the gift of God, and the effect of his special love. —Scott.

CHAP. LV. UNIVERSAL INVITATION.—Ver. 1—3. Observe, 1. Who are invited; "Ho, every one." Not the Jews only, to whom first the word of salvation was sent, but the Gentiles, the poor and the maimed, the halt and the blind, are called in to this marriage supper, whoever can be picked up out of the highways and the hedges. 2. What is the qualification required in those that shall be welcome; they must thirst. All shall be welcome to gospel-grace, upon those terms only, that gospel-grace be welcome to them. 3. Whither they are invited; "Come ye to the waters." Come to the water-side, to the ports, and quays and wharfs, on the navigable rivers, into which goods are imported, thither come and buy, for that is the market-place of foreign commodities; and to us they would have been for ever foreign, if Christ had not brought in an everlasting righteousness. Come to Christ, for he is the Fountain opened, he is the Rock smitten. Come to holy ordinances, to those streams that make glad the city of our God, come to them, and though they may seem to you plain and common things, like waters, yet to those who believe in Christ, the things signified will be as wine and milk, abundantly refreshing. Come to the healing waters, come to the living waters; whoever will, let him come, and "take of the waters of life," Rev. xxii. 17. Our Saviour referred to it, John vii. 37. "If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink."—Henry.

An exhortation to justice and piety, in the prospect of the near approach of God's salvation, 1. Encouragement to strangers and eunuchs to expect spiritual blessings, in the way of faith and obedience, 3. A severe rebuke of blind and wicked teachers and rulers, 9.

THUS saith the LORD, [a]Keep ye *judgment, and do justice: [b]for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed.

2 [c]Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that [e]keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and [f]keepeth his hand from doing any evil.

3 ¶ Neither let [g]the son of the stranger,[1] that hath [h]joined himself to the LORD, speak, saying, [i]The LORD hath utterly separated me from his people: [k]neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree.

4 For thus saith the LORD unto the eunuchs that keep my sabbaths, and [l]choose the things that please me, and [m]take hold of my covenant;

5 Even unto them [n]will I give in mine house, and within my walls, a place [o]and a name [p]better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, [q]that shall not be cut off.

6 Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the LORD, to serve him, and to love the name of the LORD, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant;

7 Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt-offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for [y]mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people.

8 The Lord GOD, [z]which gathereth the outcasts of Israel, saith, [a]Yet will I gather others to him, [†]besides those that are gathered unto him.

9 ¶ All ye beasts of the field,[2] come to devour; yea, all ye beasts in the forest.

10 His [c]watchmen are blind: they are all ignorant, [e]they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; [‡]sleeping, lying down, [f]loving to slumber.

11 Yea, [g]they are [§]greedy dogs which [l]can never have enough, and they [h]are shepherds that cannot understand: they [i]all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter.[3]

12 Come ye, say they, I will fetch wine, and we will fill ourselves with strong drink; and to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant.

3 ¶ But [f]draw near hither, ye [g]sons of the sorceress,[1] the seed of the adulterer and the whore.

4 Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? [m]are ye not children of transgression, a seed of falsehood,

5 [n]Enflaming yourselves [l]with idols under every green tree, [p]slaying the children in the valleys under the clifts of the rocks?

6 Among [q]the smooth stones[2] of the stream is thy portion; they, they are thy lot: even [r]to them hast thou poured a drink-offering, thou hast offered a meat-offering. [s]Should I receive comfort in these?

7 Upon a lofty and high mountain hast thou set thy bed: even thither wentest thou up to offer sacrifice.

8 Behind the doors also and the posts hast thou set up thy remembrance; for thou hast discovered thyself to another than me, and art gone up: thou hast enlarged thy bed, and *made thee a covenant with them; thou lovedst their bed [†]where thou sawest it.

GOD'S WAYS.—Ver. 8, 9. The thoughts and ways of the Lord, in his dealings with sinners, are wholly different from those of men, and often contrary to them; and they are as far above them, as the heavens are above the earth. His wisdom and love, in giving his only begotten Son to be the sacrifice for the sins of his enemies, and thus glorifying his justice, holiness, and law, even when showing mercy to the vilest transgressors; his method of justifying the ungodly by faith in the righteousness of Christ, and of sanctifying them by his new-creating Spirit; his way of teaching men to live sober, righteous, and godly lives, by the preaching of that free salvation, which the wise men of the world supposed to tend to licentiousness; his plan of hiding these things from the wise and prudent, and revealing them to babes; his constant readiness to pardon and save all that come, to supply all their wants, enrich them with all blessings, and fill them with peace and joy in believing, notwithstanding their former provocations; his rule of not "calling the righteous, but sinners to repentance," and formerly his calling of the Gentiles and rejection of the Jews: these things, and numberless others, show God's thoughts and ways to be very different from man's, and infinitely more excellent. Men are apt to think the unworthiness of the object a bar to their kindness: and to reject those that are beneath them, or have been provoking, or who have been relieved before, or who are likely to be further burdensome. They are apt to despair of many descriptions of sinners, and to excuse their neglect of them, by the pretence that they are incorrigible: but it is well that the Lord does not deal with them by such rules.—Scott.

CHAP. LVI. SANCTIFICATION OF THE SABBATH.—Ver. 2. We are not just if we rob God of his time. Sabbath-sanctification is here put for all the duties of the first table, the fruits of our love to God; as justice and judgment, for all those of the second table, the fruits of our love to our neighbour. Observe, 1. The duty required, which is, to keep the Sabbath; to keep it as a talent we are to trade with, as a treasure we are intrusted with; "Keep it holy, keep it safe, keep it with care and caution, keep it from polluting it; allow neither yourselves nor others either to violate the holy rest, or omit the holy work, of that day. If this be intended primarily for the Jews in Babylon, it was fit that they should be particularly put in mind of this; because, when by reason of their distance from the temple, they could not observe the other institutions of their law, yet they might distinguish themselves from the heathen by putting a difference between God's day and other days. But it being required more generally of man, and the son of man, it intimates that Sabbath sanctification should be a duty in gospel-times, when the bounds of the church should be enlarged, and other rites and ceremonies abolished. Observe, Those that would keep the Sabbath from polluting it, must put on resolution; must not only do this, but lay hold on it, for Sabbath-time is precious, but it is very apt to slip away, if we take not great care; and therefore we must lay hold on it, and keep our hold; must do it, and persevere in it.—Henry.

UNFAITHFUL MINISTERS OF RELIGION.—Ver. 10—12. Through such supineness and profligacy, the nation was exposed to ruin; and the Roman armies were summoned to execute vengeance upon it, under the figure of the wild beasts of the forest being called on to come and devour a neglected flock of sheep. The watchmen were so blinded and ignorant, that they saw no danger; even the shepherd's dog could bark when the wolf came; but they were dumb dogs, and could not bark; they were neither capable of instructing the people, nor inclined to do any thing towards it; for they were lazy, drowsy, and utterly insensible. But though they did not copy the faithfulness and vigilance of the dog; yet they were more greedy than that animal, and their rapacity could not be satisfied. They understood not their duty as shepherds; but they were sufficiently quick-sighted and attentive to their interest, and every one was looking out to see what lucre he could acquire in his peculiar station, by any means whatever. They were likewise equally luxurious and intemperate; and expected a perpetuity and an increase of prosperity and self-indulgence, when they were upon the brink of ruin! Alas, how many, in every age of the church hitherto, might here, as in a mirror, have recognized their own likeness, if they had not been blind!—Scott.

CHAP. LVII. INFATUATION OF IDOLATRY.—Ver. 3—8. Being eagerly bent upon idolatry, the Jews performed their worship under every green tree: and whilst they adored proud, ambitious, revengeful, cruel, intemperate deities, the imagined characters, pretended exploits, and abominable rites of these idols, inflamed them with every diabolical and sensual lust: so that they even sacrificed their children, in lonely valleys, and in the caverns of the rocks. They were accustomed to take stones from the brooks, to set them up, and anoint them with oil; and whenever any of them met with a stone of this kind, they paid a stupid worship to it, with drink-offerings and meat-offerings, as if it had been their God and portion! And indeed they were likely to have all the happiness, which such deities would allot them, and no other: for could they suppose that the Lord would take pleasure in idolaters or even endure them.—Scott.

GOD'S GLORY.—Ver. 15. He is "the high and lofty One that inhabits eternity." Let this possess us with very high and honourable thoughts of the God with whom we have to do. First, That his being and perfections are exalted infinitely above every creature, not only above what they have themselves, but above what they can conceive concerning him, "far above all" their "blessing and praise," Neh. ix. 5. "He is the high and lofty

One," and there is no creature like him, nor any to be compared with him. It speaks likewise his sovereign dominion over all, and the incontestable right he has to give both law and judgment to all: he is "higher than the highest," Eccl. v. 8, than the "highest heavens," Ps. cxiii. 4. Secondly, That with him there is neither beginning of days, nor end of life, nor change of time; he is both immortal and immutable, he only "has immortality," 1 Tim. vi. 16. He has it of himself, and he has it constantly, he inhabits it, and cannot be dispossessed of it. We must shortly remove into eternity, but God always inhabits it. Thirdly, That there is an infinite rectitude in his nature, an exact conformity with himself, and a steady design of his own glory, in all that he does; and this appears in every thing by which he has made himself known, for his name is "Holy," and all that desire to be acquainted with him, must know him as a holy God. Fourthly, That the peculiar residence and discovery of his glory are in the mansions of light and bliss above; "I dwell in the high and holy place, and will have all the world to know it." Whoever have any business with God must direct to him as their Father in heaven, for there he dwells.

GOD'S CONDESCENSION.—Ver. 15. First, With those who are truly penitent, God will dwell; he will visit them graciously, will converse familiarly with them by his word and spirit, as a man does with those of his own family; he will be always nigh to them, and present with them; he that dwells in the highest heavens, dwells in the lowest hearts, and inhabits sincerity as surely as he inhabits eternity; in these he delights. Secondly, He will revive their heart and spirit; will speak that to them, and work that in them, by the word and Spirit of his grace, which will be reviving to them, as a cordial to one that is ready to faint. He will give them reviving joys and hopes, sufficient to balance all the griefs and fears that break their spirits. He dwells with them, and his presence is reviving.—Henry.

CHAP. LVIII. BLESSING OF SABBATH-KEEPING.—Ver. 13, 14. 1. We shall have the comfort of it; the work will be its own wages. "If we call the Sabbath a delight, then shall we delight ourselves in the Lord;" he will more and more manifest himself to us as the delightful Subject of our thoughts and meditations, and the delightful Object of our best affections. 2. We shall have the honour of it; "I will make thee to ride upon the high places of the earth;" which denotes not only great security. If God by his grace enables us to live above the world, and so to manage it, as not only not to be hindered by it, but to be furthered and carried on by it in our journey toward heaven, then he makes us "to ride on high places of the earth." 3. We shall have the profit of it; I will "feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father," with all the blessings of the covenant, and all the precious products of Canaan, which was a type of heaven, and the heritage of Jacob. Observe, the heritage of believers is what they shall not only be portioned with hereafter, but fed with now; fed with the hopes of it, and not flattered; fed with the earnests and foretastes of it; and they that are so fed, have reason to say that they are well fed.—Henry.

HYPOCRITICAL FAST.—Ver. 3, 4. The persons here addressed had mortified themselves with apparent sorrow and contrition; and they inquired wherefore the Lord had not noticed their services? But he answered, that while they denied themselves in one respect, they indulged themselves in others; especially their pride, avarice, and malignant passions: for at the very time, when they seemed to abase themselves before God in fasting, they exacted the full measure of hard labour from their oppressed slaves, or their usurious debts from their starving debtors. Their fasting increased their self-preference, and excited them to fierce controversies, or bitter resentments: it was also the cloak of, and commutation for, their exactions and oppressions of the poor, whom they most unjustly smote and abused, for not complying in every thing with their inclinations. And surely they should not fast in this hypocritical, ostentatious, and unrighteous manner, or call a day thus spent, a fast, or expect that God would hear their prayers or accept their services.

GENUINE FAST.—Ver. 6, 7. The fast that God approved would be attended with the mortification of pride, avarice, and worldly lusts; and with the unequivocal fruits of true repentance. They, that observed such a fast, would loose the bonds of those whom they had iniquitously enslaved or imprisoned; they would moderate the labours of their servants; they would cease from usurious exactions, and remit the debts which either were contracted through fraud and oppression, or which the poor debtor was unable to discharge; they would break every yoke of oppression, and use their authority and influence to protect the poor, or rescue them from the injustice of others. They would also be liberal to the needy according to their wants; and not get out of the way, or frame excuses, to avoid relieving them.—Scott.

CHAP. LIX. GRIEVOUS DEGENERACY.—Ver. 3—8. The professed people of God were guilty of murders, rapines, perjuries, lies, and impiety: none of them demanded justice on delinquents, or pleaded for the truth; either the truth of God's word, or the truth of the causes that came before them. They trusted in vanity and deceit, and used lying pretences in defending their conduct: they conceived mischief to their neighbours in their hearts, and thence brought forth iniquity in their lives: with great ingenuity and assiduity they accomplished those projects, which proved pernicious, or useless, "hatch-have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness.

4 None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth: they trust in vanity, and speak lies; they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.

5 They hatch †cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web:[1] he that eateth of their eggs dieth, and that which is ‡crushed breaketh out into a viper.

6 Their webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works: [n]their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands.

7 Their feet run to evil, [p]and they make haste to shed innocent blood: [q]their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and [§]destruction are in their paths.

8 The way of peace they know not; and there is no [t]judgment in their goings: they have made them [u]crooked paths; [x]whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace.

9 ¶ Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us: we wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness.

10 We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes: we stumble at noon-day as in the night; we are [b]in desolate places as dead men.[2]

11 We roar all like bears, and mourn sore like doves: we look for judgment, but there is none; [c]for salvation, but it is far off from us.

12 For [d]our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and [e]our sins testify against us: for our transgressions are with us; and as for our iniquities, we know them;

13 In transgressing and [f]lying against the LORD, and [k]departing away from our God, speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood.

14 And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter.

15 Yea, truth faileth; and [o]he that departeth from evil *maketh himself a prey: and the LORD saw it, and it †displeased him that there was no judgment.

16 ¶ And he saw that there was no man,[3] and wondered that there was no intercessor: therefore his arm brought salvation unto him; and his righteousness, it sustained him.

17 For [r]he put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation upon his head; and he put on [s]the garments of vengeance for clothing, and was clad with zeal as a cloak.

18 According to their ‡deeds, accordingly he will repay, fury to his adversaries, recompence to his enemies; to the islands he will repay recompence.

ing cockatrice' eggs, and weaving the spider's web;" so that he, who shared in the fruits of their labour, was seduced into destructive errors and iniquities, or involved in ruin; and when advantage was expected from their ingenious schemes and persevering efforts, and the egg, so to speak, was hatched, a viper burst forth for their destruction. Nor could their ingenuity in devising schemes, (as the spider frames its web from its own bowels,) to deliver or save themselves, become garments to cover them, or their own works justify them; for indeed they would appear to be works of injustice and violence. They lost no time, and spared no pains, to do evil, and to shed innocent blood: all their thoughts were employed about iniquity, and wherever they went, devastation and destruction attended their paths. They had no acquaintance with the ways of peace, judgment, and justice; and they walked in such crooked and winding paths of subtle policy and selfishness, that none, who go in them, can know any thing of peace with God, or true peace of heart and conscience. Alas! how exactly does this correspond with the conduct and character of professed Protestant Christians in every quarter of the globe.—Scott.

THE BLESSED PROMISE.—Ver. 19. "When the enemy shall come in like a flood," like a high spring tide, or a land flood, which threatens to bear down all before them without control, then the spirit of the Lord by some secret, undiscerned power, shall lift up a standard against him, and so, (as the margin reads it) put him to flight. He that was delivered, will still deliver. When God's people are weak and helpless, and have no standard to lift up against the invading power, God will "give a banner to them that fear him," Ps. lx. 4, will by his spirit lift up a standard, which will draw multitudes together to appear on the church's behalf. Some read it, "He shall come" (the name of the Lord and his glory before foreseen in the Messiah promised) "like a straight river, the Spirit of the Lord lifting him up for an Ensign." Christ, by the preaching of his gospel shall cover the earth with the knowledge of God as with the waters of a flood, the "Spirit of the Lord" setting up Christ as a "Standard" to the Gentiles, chap. xi. 10. All this should redound to the glory of God, and the advancement of religion in the world; ver. 19. "So shall they fear the name of the Lord and his glory," in all nations that lie eastward or westward. The deliverance of the Jews out of captivity, and the destruction brought on their oppressors, would awaken multitudes to inquire concerning the God of Israel, and induce them to serve and worship him, and enlist themselves under the standard which the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up.—Henry.

CHAP. LX. GLORY OF THE CHURCH—Ver. 1—22. As Jesus is the Sun of righteousness and the light of the church and of the world, he must be JEHOVAH; for "JEHOVAH shall arise" upon the church, "and his glory shall be seen upon her." Zion is here called on to lift up her downcast eyes, to behold the blessed effects of her irradiation. On every side converts were seen flocking to her, as her sons and daughters, from the most remote regions, to be nursed at her side, under her care and tuition, and fed upon her spiritual provisions. At this sight she would "overflow with joy;" her heart would be dilated with gratitude, combined with reverence of God, and humble fear of acting wrong in such unexpected prosperity. For the multitudes, which dwelt in the distant countries, separated from her by the sea, would be converted; and all their treasures, and all the wealth and power of the Gentile world, would be brought to her. This would be as surprising to the remnant of poor believers, as it would have been to the Jews, after their successive oppressions, to have had all the rulers and grandees of Persia, Greece, Rome, and Tyre, crowding into Jerusalem with their immense revenues, in order to enlarge and beautify that holy city, and to support the temple-worship. In order to bring such vast treasures, Jerusalem must have been filled and surrounded with beasts of burden, such as the Midianites carried their merchandise upon. Thus they and the Arabians are represented as bringing gold for tribute to Zion's King, and incense to be used in his worship as their God; that they might show forth his praises with all their power. All the flocks of Kedar and Nebaioth, other districts of Arabia, would be brought for acceptable sacrifices on God's altar: and thus he would honour and beautify more than ever his temple, where his name had so long been glorified. All this is evidently a figurative prediction of the purity and enlargement of the church; of the alacrity and zeal with which different nations will dedicate themselves and their substance to the service of God; and of the multitude of spiritual sacrifices, which will in every place be presented to the Father with acceptance, through Christ, our temple, altar, and great high priest. The multitude of converts is next represented under another figure. The church sees immense numbers from every quarter thronging to her with one consent, as large flights of birds darken the air like a cloud, and as doves hasten to the windows of the dove-house; and she inquires, Who they are? To this the Lord answers, that surely the isles of the Gentiles would wait for him, to give them admission into his family; and that it would become the first use of the ships of Tarshish, which traded to the most remote regions, to bring her children, and all their wealth with them, to Zion, that they might worship the name of Zion's God, who thus glorified her: or they would be among the first that did so.—This prediction will be accomplished, when Christians shall unanimously agree to make commerce and navigation subservient to the preaching of the gospel, in every country with which they trade. For the locality of the emblem, taken from the Jewish temple and worship, rendered it necessary that it should be predicted in this manner; rather than as the setting up of the worship of JEHOVAH in those distant lands. The increase of knowledge, holiness, comfort, and prosperity in the church, shall be so great, that it shall resemble a new building erected in the place of an old one, in which gold and silver were used, instead of brass and iron, &c.; or, like a city, whose magistrates had been grievous oppressors, but were now become equitable and peaceable in the greatest degree, and sought nothing but the quiet and prosperity of the public; and whose tax-gatherers had been oppresive exactors, but were now become most just and equitable. This represents the internal peace and purity of the church, and the excellency of her rulers and teachers. Along with this, external peace will be connected: so that no wars, invasions, or persecutions will disturb her repose: but the very walls of Zion will be justly called Salvation, and her gates inscribed with praise to her God and protector. The Lord himself will shine upon the church with so glorious and enduring a light, as shall eclipse all that hath heretofore been enjoyed by her, from the word and Spirit of God. And this light shall no more be withdrawn or obscured, to the end: for the days of Zion's mourning shall then be ended; and this heavenly light and glory, and joy on earth, shall usher in the light, glory, and joy of the eternal world. The people shall then be all righteous; they shall inherit the earth as long as it endures, and heaven for ever. The church shall take root and grow, and flourish as a branch that God hath planted; and prosper as the work of his hands, that he may be glorified. From very small numbers and feeble beginnings, the people of God shall multiply, and become exceedingly numerous and powerful: this the Lord will hasten with all due speed, when the appointed season arrives.—Scott.

CHAP. LXI. COMFORT.—Ver. 3. Jesus gives, 1. "Beauty for ashes;" whereas they lay in ashes, as was usual in times of great mourning, they shall not only be raised out of their dust, but made to look pleasant. Here is an elegant paronomasia in the original; He will give them "pheer"—"beauty," for "epher"—"ashes;" he will turn their sorrow into joy, as quickly and as easily as you can transpose a letter; for he speaks, and it is done. 2. "The oil of joy," which "makes the face to shine," instead of "mourning," which disfigures the countenance, and makes it unlovely. This "oil of joy," the saints have from that "oil of gladness" with which Christ himself was "anointed above his fellows," Heb. i. 9. 3. The "garments of praise," such beautiful garments as were worn on thanksgiving days, instead of the "spirit of heaviness, dimness," or "contraction;" open joys for secret mournings. The "spirit of heaviness" they keep to themselves; (Zion's mourners "weep in secret;") but the joy they are recompensed with, they are "clothed with" as with a garment in the eye of others. Observe, Where God gives the "oil of joy," he gives the "garment of praise."—Henry.

SACREDNESS OF THE CHURCH.—Ver. 10, 11. The church here answers to those gracious assurances that had been given her, declaring that she greatly and inwardly rejoiced in the LORD her God, and anticipated the glorious times that had been predicted. For he had arrayed her with his salvation and righteousness, as her covering and ornament, in order to her espousals to himself; for which he thus made preparation, as the bridegroom was used to deck himself with ornaments, and the bride to adorn herself with the jewels presented to her. And she expressed the fullest assurance, that as the earth, or even the well-cultivated garden, yields an increase of the seed sown in it, so surely would the LORD cause righteousness for his people, and praise and glory for himself, to spring forth before all the nations of the earth.—The word rendered ornaments is supposed to mean a crown like those worn by the priests; indeed, the whole alludes to the "garments for glory and beauty" worn by the high priest, and the white linen worn by all the priests; the word rendered decketh himself, properly signifies a priest's habiting himself with the ornaments proper for his office; and this language is peculiarly applicable to the case of Christians; who, adorned with the robe of righteousness conferred on their great High Priest, are through him made kings and priests to our God. —Scott.

CHAP. LXII. IMPORTUNITY FOR THE PROSPERITY OF THE CHURCH.—Ver. 1. The prophet "will not hold his peace," he "will not rest;" he will mind his business, will take pains, and never desire to take his ease; and herein he was a type of Christ, who was indefatigable in executing the office of a prophet, and made it his meat and drink till he had finished his work. Observe here, 1. What the prophet's resolution is; "he will not hold his peace," he will "continue instant in preaching;" will not only faithfully deliver, but frequently repeat, the messages he has "received from the Lord." If people receive not the precepts and promises at first, he will inculcate them, and give them line upon line; and he will "continue instant in prayer," he will never hold his peace at the throne of grace, till he has prevailed with God for the mercies promised; he will "give himself to prayer," and to the "ministry of the word," as Christ's ministers must, Acts vi. 4, who must labour frequently in both, and never be weary of this well-doing. The business of ministers is to speak from God to his people, and to God for his people; and in neither of these must they be silent. 2. What is the principle of this resolution —"for Zion's sake, and for Jerusalem's," not for the sake of any private interest of his own, but for the church's sake, because he has an affection and concern for Zion, and rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.

2 And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name.

3 Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

5 For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee:[1] and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 ¶ I have [t]set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that [$]make mention of the LORD, keep not silence:

7 And give him no [t]rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

8 ¶ The LORD hath [n]sworn by his right hand,[2] and by the arm of his strength, *Surely I [o]will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast laboured:

9 But they that have gathered it [p]shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.

10 ¶ Go through, go through the gates; [q]prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; [r]lift up a standard for the people.

11 Behold, [s]the LORD hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, [u]his reward is with him, and his [†]work before him.

12 And they shall call them, The holy people, [y]The redeemed of the LORD: and thou shalt be called, Sought out, A city not forsaken.

CHAP. LXIII.

Christ sheweth who he is, what his victory is over his enemies, 1; and his mercy towards his church, 7.

WHO is this that cometh [b]from Edom,[1] with dyed garments from [d]Bozrah? this that is *glorious in his apparel, [e]travelling in the greatness of his strength? I, that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.

2 Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat?

3 I have [h]trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.

4 For [k]the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come.

5 And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore [m]mine own arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury it upheld me.

6 And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury,[2] and I will bring down their strength to the earth.

7 ¶ I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the LORD, and the praises of the LORD, according to all that the LORD hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them, according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving-kindnesses.

8 For he said, [t]Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: [z]so he was their Saviour.

9 In all their affliction he was afflicted, and [z]the angel of his presence saved them:[3] in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old.

10 But they rebelled, and [d]vexed his Holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.

11 Then he remembered the days of old, Moses, and his people, saying, [g]Where is he that brought them up out of the sea, with the [†]shepherd of his flock? [h]where is he that put his Holy Spirit within him?

12 That led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, [i]to make himself an everlasting name?

13 That led them through the deep, as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble?[4]

14 As a beast goeth down into the valley, [n]the Spirit of the LORD caused him to rest: so didst thou lead thy people, to make thyself a glorious name.

15 ¶ Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory; where is thy zeal and thy strength, the [‡]sounding of [$]thy bowels, and of thy mercies toward me? Are they restrained?

16 Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel ac-it lies near his heart: whatever becomes of his own house and family, he desires to "see the good of Jerusalem," and resolves to seek it all the days of his life, Ps. cxxii. 8, 9; cxxviii. 5. It is God's Zion, and his Jerusalem, and it is therefore dear to him, because it is so to God, and because God's glory is interested in its prosperity.—Henry.

GOD BLESSING—MAN WORKING.—Ver. 8, 9. The Lord is here said to have sworn by his right hand and the arm of his strength, or pledged the honour of his omnipotence, that he will rescue his church from her enemies. The images are taken from the devastations, which were made in Judah, when the enemies of the Jews seized their corn and wine: but when the invaders were vanquished, then they reaped their harvest and vintage, and feasted upon them in the courts of the temple, whither they carried their peace-offerings, first-fruits, oblations, &c. And it implies the deliverance of the Christian church from those persecutors, who have often kept from them the word of God, and deprived them of the labours of their ministers, by putting them to death, immuring them in prisons or driving them into foreign countries. But a blessed change is here predicted, which would be welcomed and improved in a holy and thankful manner. Ver. 10—12. The friends and ministers of the church are here commanded to go through her gates, to cast up an highway, and to remove every obstruction, that the people might come to Zion from the ends of the earth; and to lift up a standard to give them notice, that the time was arrived. For the proclamation was sent forth to the ends of the earth, that Zion's salvation or Saviour was come.—Scott.

CHAP. LXIII. THE VICTORIOUS COMBAT.—Ver. 1—6. These verses contain a prophetical representation of the victories of Christ over the enemies of his church; for of him the passage must be interpreted, nor can we admit of so much as an accommodation of it to any other. But it is remarkable, that many interpreters have understood it of the sufferings of Christ, and of his being covered with his own blood: though nothing can be more evident, than that he is represented by the prophet, as covered with the blood of his enemies, and as a mighty conqueror and avenger; and not as a lamb slain for a sacrifice. Whoever considers attentively what hath been proposed on a parallel Scripture, will probably be convinced that Edom, and Bozrah, (the chief city of Edom,) are here to be understood mystically; and that the destruction of the chief city of the anti-christian powers, and of all that pertinaciously adhere to her, are here predicted, and that no other events fully answer to the description; though the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and that of the Roman emperors and armies, about the time of Constantine's advancement to the imperial throne, have been mentioned by eminent interpreters as a partial accomplishment of it.—The prophet, in vision, beholds the Messiah returning in triumph from the conquest of his enemies, (of whom Edom was a type;) and being struck with his majestic appearance, he inquires, Who this is, thus returning from Bozrah, with garments stained with blood: being arrayed in glorious apparel, as some mighty prince; and travelling, not as one wearied with the combat, but in the greatness of his strength, and as able and prepared to vanquish every opposing power? To this, Messiah answers, that it is he, the judge, that gives sentence in righteousness against his enemies, performs all his promises, and is mighty to save his church. —The prophet again inquires; Wherefore his apparel was discoloured, and why he appeared like one that had been treading the purple grapes in the wine-press? To which Messiah answers, that he had been treading the wine-press of the wrath of God, and as by his own power, without any human help, he had crushed his obstinate opposers; and that he would thus trample upon them all, in his fury and indignation, and would account their blood, staining his garments, as honourable to his justice, truth, and power; for the day of vengeance was in his heart, or was determined on, as pleasing to him; being the appointed season of rescuing his church of redeemed sinners from oppression, chap. lxi. 2. He had, indeed, looked for some, to stand forth to protect his people and support his cause, and he marvelled that there was none; and, therefore, his own arm effected the intended salvation, and his hot displeasure sustained him in taking vengeance on her enemies; and that this was but an earnest of the full end, that he would make of all who opposed him and his cause. The event will best determine whether these predictions are to be understood literally or not.

GOD'S PAST GOODNESS—OUR HOPE.—Ver. 11—14. Some of his people, being made sensible of the wrath of God against them, and reflecting how his power had been exercised in behalf of their fathers, and what promises had been made to them, begin seriously to inquire, Where he is, who showed such wonders of power and love to Moses and his people? Where is the Lord, who brought Israel up out of the Red Sea, with those to whom he had committed them, as a flock to the care of a shepherd, but who could not have delivered either themselves or the people? Where is he, that puts his Holy Spirit upon the seventy elders, to enable them to assist Moses in his too arduous work? Who led the vast multitude of Israel through the deep channel of the Red Sea, (the waters of which, he divided by his power, for the glory of his name,) with as much safety and as little obstruction, as a horse passeth in the open plains; and who afterwards led them through the wilderness to the rest and plenty of Canaan, as the beast goeth down, after the labour of the day, to feed and lie down in the fruitful valley? Would this mighty God of Jacob no more glorify his name, in delivering his ancient people from their calamities?—Scott.

10 And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.

11 ¶ But ye are [f]they that forsake the LORD, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that [§]troop, and that furnish the drink-offering unto that [‖]number.

12 Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: [k]because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not.

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, my servants shall eat,[3] but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed:

CHAP. LXIV. CONTENTS OF THE CHAPTER.—Ver. 1—3. This chapter continues the prayer begun in the preceding; which has been interpreted to be that of the first converts made from among the dispersed Jews, when that nation is about to be re-instated in the church. These supplicants perceive vast obstacles in the way of their desires being granted, especially from the power of their oppressors and adversaries; but they most earnestly call upon God to appear, and remove them all. They long for him to rend the visible heavens in some awful manner, and to melt the mountains, that they might flow down as water at his presence; which he could do with the same facility, as the fire melteth the wax, or the metal; or even as it causeth the water to boil. Thus, he could make his name known to his adversaries, and put whole nations to confusion and consternation before him.—Scott.

MOURNFUL LAMENTATION.—Ver. 11. The people lament, most of all, that "the temple was burnt with fire;" but, as soon as it was built, they were told what their sin would bring it to; 2 Chron. vii. 21, "This house which is high shall be an astonishment." Observe how pathetically they bewail the ruins of the temple; 1. It was "their holy and beautiful house;" it was a most sumptuous building; but the holiness of it was, in their eye, the greatest beauty of it, and, consequently, the profanation of it was the saddest part of its desolation, and that which grieved them most, that the sacred services which used to be performed there, were discontinued. 2. It was the place where "their fathers praised God" with their sacrifices and songs; what pity is it that that should lie in ashes, which had been for so many ages the glory of their nation. It aggravated their present disuse of the songs of Sion, that their fathers had so often praised God with them. They interest God in the cause, when they plead that it was the house where "he had been praised," and put him in mind too of his covenant with their fathers, by taking notice of their fathers praising him. 3. With it "all their pleasant things were laid waste;" all their desires and delights, all those things which were employed by them in the service of God, which they had a great delight in: not only the furniture of the temple, the altars and table, but especially the Sabbaths and new moons, and all their religious feasts, which they used to keep with gladness; their ministers and solemn assemblies, these were all a desolation. Note, God's people reckon their sacred things their most delectable things; rob them of holy ordinances and the means of grace, and you "lay waste all their pleasant things;" What have they more? Observe here how God and his people have their interests twisted and interchanged; when [illegible] of the cities for their own habitation, they call them "thy holy cities," [illegible] they were dedicated; when they speak of the temple wherein God dwelt, they [illegible] "beautiful house," and its furniture "our pleasant things," for they had heartily espoused it, and all the interests of it. If thus we interest God in all our concerns by devoting them to his service, and interest ourselves in all his concerns by laying them near our hearts, we may with satisfaction leave both with him, for he will perfect both.—Henry.

CHAP. LXV. CALLING OF THE GENTILES.—Ver. 1, 2. St. Paul quotes these verses, to show God's purpose of calling the Gentiles, and casting off the unbelieving Jews. And the Lord here seems to mention this part of his conduct, to show that he did not reject the Jews for want of a disposition to mercy, though he acted according to his wise and holy sovereignty in the exercise of it.—The heathen nations did not seek after him, or call on him, nor were they called by his name; yet, without their solicitation, the preachers of the gospel were sent among them. Thus was he "sought of," or "made known to," them that asked not for him; and he "was found of them that sought him not:" for when they were pursuing their sinful projects, and devoted to their idols, without knowing or thinking any thing about him; he demanded their attention, called on them to look to him for salvation and happiness, and disposed their hearts to obey the call; and thus he showed towards them the unsearchable riches of his grace. "The Gentiles, which knew not God, should seek after him, when he had moved their hearts with his Holy Spirit." But the Jews had these blessings continually proposed to them; and Christ and his apostles invited them first to accept of his salvation.

JEWISH CHARACTER POURTRAYED.—Ver. 3—7. No doubt the Lord guided the mind of his prophet, to draw the character of the Jews in such a manner, that it might serve for a reproof of the people in his own times, as well as for the warning of after ages. They were a people that continually provoked God in the most avowed manner, even in his more immediate presence, at Jerusalem and the temple. In contempt of his law, they would sacrifice in gardens and on high places; nay, they would burn incense also, upon altars of brick or tile, or on the tops of their houses; though this ought to have been done by none but the priests, within the sanctuary on the golden altar, or on their censers. Because God had made the touch of a dead body, or grave, a ceremonial uncleanness; they would abide, and even lodge among the tombs, for some superstitious or idolatrous purposes, or as using witchcraft or necromancy; and, despising his authority, they ate swine's flesh, and carried even the broth made of unclean meats, or parts of the abominable sacrifices to their idols, in their vessels, perhaps for acceptable presents to their friends. These were evidences of their evil will, and preference of their own inventions to the appointments of God and of their unwillingness to have [illegible] holy service. Yet, at the same time they were full of [illegible]

15 And [r]ye shall leave your name for a curse unto[4] my chosen: for [s]the Lord GOD shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name:

16 That he who blesseth himself in the earth, shall bless himself in [x]the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth, shall swear by the God of truth; [x]because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes.

17 ¶ For, behold, [a]I create new heavens and a new earth: and [b]the former shall not be remembered, nor come [†]into mind.

18 But [c]be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

19 And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and [e]the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

20 There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; [g]but the sinner, being an hundred years old,[5] shall be accursed.

21 And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall [‡]long enjoy the work of their hands.

23 They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble: [l]for they are the seed of the blessed of the LORD, and their offspring with them.

24 And it shall come to pass, that [m]before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

25 The [n]wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and [o]dust shall be the serpent's meat.[6] They [p]shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the LORD.

CHAP. LXVI.

God will be served in humble sincerity, 1. The humble comforted, 5. God's judgments against the wicked, 15.

THUS saith the LORD, [s]The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool: where is the house that ye build unto me? and where is the place of my rest?

2 For [c]all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the LORD: but [d]to this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and [e]trembleth at my word.

3 He that killeth an ox, is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a [*]lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that [†]burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol: yea, [l]they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations.

4 I also [k]will choose their [‡]delusions,[1] and [l]will bring their fears upon them; because [m]when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but [n]they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

5 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, [o]ye that tremble at his word; [p]Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the LORD be glorified: [q]but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

6 A voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, [r]a voice of the LORD that rendereth recompence to his enemies.

7 Before [s]she travailed,[2] she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man-child.

8 Who [t]hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not [§]cause to bring forth? saith the LORD: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

10 [y]Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, [z]all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye [a]that mourn for her;

11 That [b]ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the [‖]abundance of her glory.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, [c]I will extend peace to her like a river, and [d]the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: [e]then shall ye suck, [f]ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

13 As [g]one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and [h]ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, [i]your heart shall rejoice, and [k]your bones shall flourish like an herb;[3] and [l]the hand of the LORD shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

15 ¶ For, behold, [m]the LORD will come with fire, and [n]with his chariots like a whirl-superior sanctity, and despised others as unworthy to come near them. This hateful temper was peculiarly prevalent among the Pharisees, especially in the days of Christ. —Scott.

MILLENNIAL BLESSINGS.—Ver. 20. Untimely deaths by the sword or sickness shall be no more known as they have been, and by this means there shall be "no more the voice of crying," ver. 19. When there shall be "no more death," there shall be "no more sorrow," Rev. xxi. 4. As death has reigned by sin, so "life" shall "reign by righteousness," Rom. v. 14, 21. Believers through Christ shall be satisfied with life, though it be ever so short on earth. If an infant end its days quickly, yet it shall not be reckoned to die untimely, for the shorter its life is, the longer will its rest be; though "death reign over them that have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression," yet they, dying in the arms of Christ, the second Adam, and belonging to his kingdom, are not to be called "infants of days," but even the child shall be reckoned to "die a hundred years old," for he shall rise again at full age, shall rise to eternal life. Some understand it of children who in their childhood are so eminent for wisdom and grace, and by death nipt in the blossom, that they may be said to die a hundred years old. And as for old men, it is promised that "they shall fill their days" with the "fruits of righteousness," which they shall "still bring forth in old age; to show that the Lord is upright," and then it is "a good old age." An old man, who is wise, and good, and useful, may truly be said to have "filled his days." Old men, who have their hearts upon the world, have never filled their days, never have enough of this world, but would still continue longer in it. But that man dies old and satur dierum—full of days, who, with Simeon, having seen God's salvation, desires now to depart in peace.

BLESSING IN EVERY THING.—Ver. 23. "They shall not labour in vain," for they shall not only enjoy the work of their hands themselves, but they shall leave it with satisfaction to those that shall come after them, and not with such a melancholy prospect as Solomon did; Eccl. ii. 18, 19, "They shall not beget" and "bring forth" children for trouble;" for "they are" themselves "the seed of the blessed of the Lord," and there is a blessing entailed upon them by descent from their ancestors, which their offspring with them shall partake of, and shall be, as well as they, "the seed of the blessed of the Lord." They shall not bring forth for trouble; for, 1. God will make their children that rise up comforts to them; they shall have the joy of "seeing them walk in the truth. 2. He will make the times that come after comfortable to their children; as they shall be good, so it shall be well with them; they shall not be brought forth to days of trouble; nor shall it ever be said, "Blessed is the womb that bare not."—Henry.

CHAP. LXVI. ABROGATION OF THE CEREMONIAL LAW.—Ver. 3, 4. The Jews might have urged, that though God did not want the temple for his habitation, yet it was both honourable and necessary, as the place appointed for the offering of sacrifices; but he here teaches them, that this institution was about to be superseded, nay, to become a mark of obstinate rebellion. Some interpreters suppose that he reproves the wickedness of those who brought their sacrifices to the temple, whilst they were living in the practice of murder, or the grossest crimes; but it is not probable that the Jews, during or after the days of Christ, actually offered a dog, or swine's blood, in sacrifice, or that the priests blessed or worshipped idols. Nor does the passage merely imply that their hypocrisy rendered their sacrifices abominable to God, though they were his own institutions, but the evident meaning is, that the coming and sacrifice of Christ would virtually abrogate the ceremonial law, and render all its observances nugatory; and that the Jews, who persisted in them, not as indifferent things, but in contempt of Christ and his priesthood, sacrifice, and intercession, would be guilty of as gross an affront to God as if they had committed murder, or the most atrocious profanation or idolatry. For in so doing they would choose their own proud and rebellious ways, delight in their own abominations, and show their contempt of JEHOVAH'S authority, and enmity to his holiness, as much as their fathers did, when they were mad upon their idols. He would therefore choose their delusions, as the means of bringing his judgments upon them; and as they rejected and crucified Christ, avowedly for fear of the Romans, he would bring their fears upon them, and the Romans should execute his vengeance on them in consequence of their unbelief and disobedience.—Scott.

ANTICIPATIVE BLESSING.—Ver. 7. "Before she travailed, she brought forth." This is to be applied in the type to the deliverance of the Jews out of their captivity in Babylon, which was brought about very easily and silently, without any pain or struggle, such as was when they were brought out of Egypt: that was done "by might and power," Deut. iv. 34, but this by "the Spirit of the Lord of hosts," Zech. iv. 6. Did God beget the deliverance in his purpose and promise, and will he not "bring it forth" in the accomplishment and performance of it? But this was a figure of the setting up of the Christian church in the world, and the replenishing of that family with children, which was to be named from Jesus Christ. When the Spirit was poured out, and the gospel went forth from Zion, multitudes were converted in a little time, and with little pains, compared with the vast product. The apostles, even "before they travailed," brought forth, and the children born to Christ were so numerous, and so suddenly and easily produced, that they were rather like the dew from the morning's womb than like the son from the mother's womb, Ps. cx. 3. The success of the gospel was astonishing; that

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET

JEREMIAH.

JEREMIAH (whose name signifies "the exaltation of the Lord") entered upon the prophetical office about seventy years after the death of Isaiah; during which time the reigns of Manasseh and Amon had intervened, and the former years of Josiah. The nation of the Jews was therefore at that time almost wholly given up to idolatry and wickedness. A short revival, indeed, soon took place; but the people were in general dissemblers, speedily relapsed into idolatry, and became ripe for Divine judgments. Jeremiah prophesied for forty years preceding the Babylonish captivity; and this book consists chiefly of abstracts of the several messages with which he was sent from God to the people: these are remarkable for being replete with plain and faithful reproofs, tender and affectionate expostulations, and awful denunciations of impending judgments. A large proportion of Jeremiah's predictions were accomplished during his lifetime, or soon after his death. Such were all those that related to the desolations of Jerusalem and Judah, and the adjacent countries, by the Chaldeans; and the return of the Jews from Babylon at the end of seventy years. These, in the way of argument and evidence, were most conclusive to his contemporaries and the immediately successive generations; especially as the want of historical records renders us unable, in many cases, to explain the prophecies except from the sacred narrative. But several of this prophet's predictions relate to more remote ages, and some have not yet been fulfilled. When proud Babylon was at the height of her prosperity, he foretold, not only that the Medes and Persians should prevail against her, but also that she should sink, and rise no more (li. 63, 64); which has received a most remarkable accomplishment. He predicted also the abolition of the ritual law, and the union of Israel and Judah in one faith, and the conversion of all nations (iii. 15, &c.; xxxi. 31, &c.); the dispersion of the Jews, and their preservation as a distinct people in their dispersions, which has been fulfilled to this day (xxx. 11; xlvi. 28); the calling of the Gentiles (iv. 2); the destruction of idolatry (x. 11); and the person and kingdom of Christ, with the introduction of a new dispensation, and vast prosperity to the cause of religion; with clear declarations concerning the conversion of the Jews to Christ, and their restoration to their own land (xxiii., xxxiii.) It appears that his reputation as a prophet was very high among the Jews in the time of our Saviour; for, when the people were divided in opinion who Jesus was, some supposed him to be Elijah, and others Jeremiah. His prophecies are repeatedly quoted in the New Testament as the oracles of God, and thus receive the most unreserved sanction of the apostles and evangelists (compare xxxi. 15; Matt. ii. 17, 18.—vi. 16; Matt. xi. 29.—ix. 23, 24; 1 Cor. i. 29–31.—xxxi. 31–34; Heb. viii. 8, x. 15–17). The last references are peculiarly important; for in the one of them, God himself is mentioned as speaking the words referred to; and in the other, it is said, "whereof the Holy Ghost is a witness to us," &c. This is decisive as to the judgment of the inspired apostles respecting the book on which we now enter; and is peculiarly suited to put us upon our guard against those professed friends of the Scripture, who speak of these books as venerable, authentic, or genuine remains of antiquity, of great value and high authority, but hesitate to vindicate them as divinely inspired.—A great part of this book is supposed to be poetry; and though Jeremiah is thought inferior to Isaiah in sublimity (which may, perhaps, be owing to the different circumstances in which they lived, and the different subjects on which they treated), yet it must be allowed that he is admirably pathetical; his descriptions of approaching judgments are peculiarly vivid; and his eloquence is very vigorous and impressive when inveighing against the shameless audacity of the people in rebellion against God.—It is generally allowed that the last chapter was added after Jeremiah's death, perhaps by Ezra, who probably arranged his prophecies in their present order.

[1] Jeremiah prophesied forty-one years and upwards, if we take in the prophecies he uttered in Egypt after the captivity (chap. xliii., xliv.), which are not included between the reigns of Josiah and Zedekiah.—LOWTH.

3 It came also [f]in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the end of the eleventh[1] year of Zedekiah the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.

4 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out light, like the morning, strangely diffused itself till it took hold even of "the ends of the earth." Cities and nations were born at once to Christ. The same day that the Spirit was poured out, there were three thousand souls added to the church. And when this glorious work was once begun, it was carried on wonderfully, beyond what could be imagined; "so mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed." He that "brought to the birth," in conviction of sin, "caused to bring forth" in a thorough conversion to God.

THE MINISTRY OF THE NEW DISPENSATION.—Ver. 21. "I will take of them," of the proselytes, of the Gentile converts, "for priests and for Levites," to minister in holy things, and to preside in their religious assemblies, which is very necessary for doctrine, worship, and discipline. Hitherto the priests and Levites were all taken from among the Jews, and were all of one tribe; but in gospel-times God will take of the converted Gentiles to minister to him in holy things, to teach the people, to bless them in the name of the Lord, to be the stewards of the mysteries of God, as the priests and Levites were under the law, to be pastors and teachers, or bishops, "to give themselves to the word and prayer;" and deacons to "serve tables," and, as the Levites, to take care of the "outward business of the house of God," Phil. i. 1; Acts vi. 2—4. The apostles were all Jews, and so were the seventy disciples; the great apostle of the Gentiles was himself a "Hebrew of the Hebrews;" but when churches were planted among the Gentiles, they had ministers settled, who were "of themselves elders in every church," Acts xiv. 23; Tit. i. 5, which made the ministry to spread the more easily, and to be the more familiar, and if not the more venerable, yet the more acceptable; gospel-grace, it might be hoped, would cure people of those corruptions which kept a prophet from having "honour in his own country."

CHRISTIAN ORDINANCES.—Ver. 22. The change that will be made by the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah, is here described to be, 1. A very great and universal change; it shall be a new world, "the new heavens, and the new earth," promised before, chap. lxv. 17. "Old things are passed away," behold, "all things are become new," 2 Cor. v. 17, the old covenant of peculiarity is set aside, and a new covenant, a covenant of grace, established, Heb. viii. 13. We are now to serve "in newness of the spirit," and "not in the oldness of the letter, Rom. vii. 6. New commandments are given relating both to heaven and earth, and new promises relating to both, and both together make a New Testament; so that they are new heavens, and a new earth that God will create, and these a preparative for the new heavens and new earth designed at the end of time, 2 Pet. iii. 13. 2. A change of God's own making: he will create the new heavens and the new earth. The change was made by him that had authority to make new ordinances, as well as power to make new worlds. 3. It will be an abiding, lasting change; a change never to be changed; a new world that will be always new, and never wax old, as that does, which is ready to vanish away. "It shall remain before me" unalterable; for the gospel dispensation is to continue to the end of time, and not to be succeeded by any other. The kingdom of Christ is a "kingdom that cannot be moved;" the laws and privileges of it "are things that cannot be shaken," but shall "for ever remain," Heb. xii. 27, 28. It shall therefore remain, because it is before God; it is under his eye, and care, and special protection. 4. It will be maintained in a seed that shall serve Christ; Your seed, and in them your name, shall remain —a seed of ministers, a seed of Christians; as one generation of both passes away, another generation shall come; and thus the name of Christ, with that of Christians, shall continue on earth while the earth remains, and his throne as the days of heaven. The gates of hell, though they fight against the church, shall not "prevail," nor "wear out the saints of the Most High."—Henry.

CHAP. I. JEREMIAH.—Ver. 1—3. Jeremiah, being of the family of Aaron, would have been an ordinary teacher of the people, if he had not been called to this extraordinary office; and he united in himself the priestly and prophetical character, in which, as in many other respects, he was a type of Christ. Some think he was the son of Hilkiah, the high priest, who found the book of the law in the temple, 2 Kings xxii. 8; but as no intimation is given of this, in the subsequent history, the opinion is not very probable.—Anathoth was about three miles distant from Jerusalem. Jeremiah was appointed to prophesy just after Josiah had effectually begun his reformation; and great things might have been expected from the united efforts of such a king and such a prophet, both young, and likely to continue long to be useful to their nation: yet their zealous labours aggravated the guilt, and thus accelerated the ruin of their incorrigible fellow-citizens. Jeremiah prophesied forty years before the expulsion of the Jews from the promised land, as Moses had prophesied forty years previous to their entrance into it; but with a very different effect.—Scott.

HIS MODESTY.—Ver. 6. Though God had predestinated him to this office, yet it was news to him, and a mighty surprise to hear that he should be "a prophet to the nations." We know not what God intends us for, but He knows. One would have thought he should have catched it as a piece of preferment, for so it was; but he objects against it, disables himself; "'Ah, Lord God, behold, I cannot speak' to great men and multitudes, as prophets must; I cannot speak finely or fluently; cannot word things well, as a message from God should be worded; I cannot speak with any authority, nor can expect to be heeded, for 'I am a child,' and my youth will be despised." Note, It becomes us, when of the womb I sanctified thee,[n] and I *ordained thee a prophet unto the nations.

6 Then said I, Ah, Lord GOD! behold, [p]I cannot speak; [q]for I am a child.

7 ¶ But the LORD said unto me, Say not, I am a child: [r]for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

8 Be not afraid of their faces: [t]for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

9 Then the LORD put forth his hand, and touched my mouth: and the LORD said unto me, [x]Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth.

10 See, [y]I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, [b]what seest thou? And I said, I see [c]a rod of an almond-tree.

12 Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen: for [e]I will hasten my word to perform it.

13 And the word of the LORD came unto me [f]the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, [g]I see a seething-pot;[3] and the face thereof is [†]toward the north.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the north an evil shall [‡]break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land.

15 For, lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

16 And [l]I will utter my judgments against them, touching all their wickedness, [m]who have forsaken me, [n]and have burned incense unto other gods, and [o]worshipped the works of their own hands.

17 ¶ Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, [q]and speak unto them all that I command thee: be not dismayed at their faces, lest I [§]confound thee before them.

18 For, behold, [t]I have made thee this day a defenced city,[4] and an iron pillar, and brasen walls, against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land.

19 And they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; [y]for I am with thee, saith the LORD, to deliver thee.

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

2 Go, and [b]cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD, I remember *thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown.

3 Israel was [r]holiness unto the LORD,[1] and the first-fruits of his increase: all that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ [t]Hear ye the word of the LORD, O house of Jacob, and [k]all the families of the house of Israel:

5 Thus saith the LORD, [l]What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, [n]and are become vain?

6 Neither said they, Where is the LORD that [p]brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that [q]led us through the wilderness; through a land of deserts and of pits;[2] through a land of drought, and of [r]the shadow of death; through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt?

7 And [s]I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof, and the goodness thereof: but when ye entered, [t]ye defiled my land, and made mine heritage an abomination.

8 The priests said not, Where is the LORD? and they that handle the law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit.

9 Wherefore [a]I will yet plead with you, saith the LORD, and with your children's children will I plead.

10 For pass [†]over the isles of Chittim, and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing:

11 Hath [f]a nation changed their [k]gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit.

12 Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the LORD.

13 For [k]my people have committed two evils; they have [i]forsaken me, [m]the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, [n]broken cisterns, that can hold no water.

14 ¶ Is [o]Israel a servant? is [p]he a home-born slave? why is he [‡]spoiled?

15 The young lions roared upon him, and [§]yelled, and [r]they made his land waste: [s]his cities are burned without inhabitant.

we have any service to do for God, to be afraid lest we mismanage it, and lest it suffer, through our weakness and unfitness for it; it becomes us likewise to have low thoughts of ourselves, and to be diffident of our own sufficiency. Those that are young should consider that they are so; should be afraid, as Elihu was, and not venture beyond their length.—Henry.

ASSURANCE OF DIVINE STRENGTH.—His objection, though it arose from humility and a proper sense of the greatness of the work, was alloyed with a mixture of unbelief, and a timid reluctancy to the perils and hardships to which he might be exposed. The Lord therefore overruled his objection, and ordered him not to say that he was a child; for he would embolden and strengthen him to address all to whom he sent him, and give him utterance to deliver all that he commanded him: he ought therefore to dismiss his fears, and rest assured that the Lord would be with him, to defend and deliver him, Matt. xxviii. 20.—The eighth verse is future, as well as the others; and may more literally be rendered, "Thou shalt not fear their faces," &c.: as a promise, and not as a command.—The word translated "child" is used with great latitude in Scripture; and frequently signifies one who has arrived at full maturity; so that we cannot from it determine any thing concerning the age of Jeremiah, when he entered on his prophetical office.—"To reprove the faults of all persons, the great men of the world, as well as those of lower degree, with that plainness and impartiality which the prophets used, requires a more than ordinary degree of courage." [Lowth.]

SYMBOLS OF THE ALMOND-TREE AND BOILING POT.—Ver. 11, 12. "Not only the nature of the almond-tree, but the very sound" (or meaning) "of the Hebrew word, denotes God's hastening to fulfil the prophecies which Jeremiah uttered." [Lowth.] This vision of a rod of the almond-tree, which is more forward in the spring than any other tree, represented the speedy approach of the judgments predicted against the Jews and other nations; and it was an apt emblem of the prophet's mission, who lived to witness the accomplishment of more of his own predictions, than any other prophet did. Ver. 13, 14. By another emblem the Lord showed Jeremiah what was to be the grand subject of his ministry, namely, the destruction of his people by the king of Babylon, whose dominions lay north of Judea. Jerusalem was represented to him by a pot, or caldron, boiling over a large fire: for the city was all in commotion, and about to be emptied by that fiery indignation which distressed it. The face of this seething-pot was towards the north: the place under the caldron, which was open to receive the fuel, by which the fire was kept up, faced the north: by which the Lord instructed the prophet that out of the north an evil should break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land.—Scott.

JEREMIAH'S COMMISSION.—Ver. 17. 1. The prophet must speak all that he is charged with; "Speak all that I command thee." He must forget nothing as minute, or foreign, or not worth mentioning: every word of God is weighty. He must conceal nothing for fear of offending; he must alter nothing under pretence of making it more fashionable or more palatable, but without addition or diminution, "declare the whole counsel of God." 2. He must "speak to all" that he is "charged against;" he must not whisper it in a corner to a few particular friends that will take it well, but he must appear "against the kings of Judah," if they be wicked kings, and bear his testimony against the sins even "of the princes thereof;" for the greatest of men are not exempt from the judgments either of God's hand, or of his mouth. Nay, he must not spare "the priests thereof;" though he himself was a priest, and was concerned to maintain the dignity of his order, yet he must not therefore flatter them in their sins. He must appear against the "people of the land," though they were his own people, as far as they were "against the Lord."—Henry.

CHAP. II. EARLY PIETY OF ISRAEL.—Ver. 2, 3. Jeremiah, now about to open his ministry, was ordered to "cry in the ears of Jerusalem;" to proclaim his message in the most public places of the city; and to assure the inhabitants, that the Lord remembered the nation of Israel and those events which had taken place, from the calling of Abraham, to the departure of his posterity out of Egypt, which might be called the youth of the nation; and the solemn transactions that had taken place at mount Sinai, which were as their espousals to God. The kindness of Israel's youth, and the love of their espousals, may mean either God's kindness to Israel, or Israel's professed love and zeal for him and his worship. They readily followed him out of Egypt, and on the banks of the Red Sea they sang his praise: they cheerfully and unreservedly acceded to the covenant at Sinai: and though they were guilty of many rebellions and provocations, yet they did not utterly renounce his worship, and tenaciously set up open idolatry, as they did in after ages. So that in some sense Israel might then be called holiness to the Lord, his worshippers, and the first-fruits of that harvest of believers, which he intended afterwards to reap from among men: and considering the nation as immediately dedicated to him, he was offended with all those who attempted to injure them, and punish them for presuming to devour his portion. The last clauses should be rendered, "did offend, evil did come upon them;" referring to judgments executed on Egypt, Amalek, and other nations, who opposed or assaulted Israel.—Scott.

TWO GREAT EVILS.—Ver. 13. 1. The nation "affronted their God," by turning their back upon him, as if he were not worthy their notice; "They have 'forsaken me the Fountain of living waters,' in whom they have an abundant and constant supply of all 16 Also the children of [u]Noph and [x]Tahapanes[2] have [l]broken the crown of thy head.

17 Hast thou not procured this unto thyself, [s]in that thou hast forsaken the LORD thy God, [a]when he led thee by the way?

18 And now what hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the waters of Sihor?[3] or what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria, to drink the waters of the river?

19 Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and [f]thy backslidings shall reprove thee: know therefore and see, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the LORD thy God, [h]and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord GOD of hosts.

20 For [i]of old time I have broken thy yoke, and burst thy bands; and thou saidst, I will not *transgress; when upon every high hill, and under every green tree, thou wanderest, playing the harlot.

21 Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?

22 For though thou wash thee with nitre,[4] and take thee much soap, [q]yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord GOD.

23 How [r]canst thou say, I am not polluted, I have not gone after Baalim? See thy way in the valley, know what thou hast done: †thou art a swift dromedary traversing her ways;

24 ‡A wild ass §used to the wilderness, that snuffeth up the wind [t]at her pleasure; in her occasion who can *turn her away? all they that seek her will not weary themselves; in her month they shall find her.

25 Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst; but thou saidst, †There is no hope: no; [y]for I have loved strangers, and [z]after them will I go.

26 As the thief is ashamed when he is found, so is the house of Israel ashamed; they, their kings, their princes, and their priests, and their prophets,

27 Saying to a stock, Thou art my father; and to a stone, Thou hast ‡brought me forth: [d]for they have turned §their back unto me, and not their face; but in the time of their trouble they will say, Arise, and save us.

28 But where are thy gods that thou hast made thee? let them arise, if they can save thee in the time of thy [l]trouble: for according to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah.[5]

29 Wherefore will ye plead with me? [i]ye all have transgressed against me, saith the LORD.

30 In vain have I smitten your children; they received no correction: [l]your own sword hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion.

31 ¶ O generation, see ye the word of the LORD: Have I been a wilderness unto Israel? a land of darkness? Wherefore say my people, We *are lords; we will come no more unto thee?

32 Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? [q]yet my people have forgotten me days without number.

33 Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love? therefore hast thou also [s]taught the wicked ones thy ways.

34 Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents:[6] I have not found it by †secret search, but upon all these.

35 Yet thou sayest, [x]Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me: behold, [y]I will plead with thee, because thou sayest, I have not sinned.

36 Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria.

37 Yea, thou shalt go forth from him, and thine hands upon thine head: [d]for the LORD hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them.

*THEY say, [a]If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall he return unto her again? [b]shall not that land be greatly polluted? [c]but thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; [d]yet return again to me, saith the LORD.

2 *Lift up thine eyes [f]unto the high places, and see where thou hast not been lien with. [g]In the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness:[1] and [h]thou hast polluted the land with thy whoredoms, and with thy wickedness.

3 Therefore [i]the showers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain; and thou hadst [k]a whore's forehead, thou refusedst to be ashamed.

4 Wilt [l]thou not from this time cry unto me, My Father, thou art [m]the guide of my youth?

5 Will [n]he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Behold, [o]thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest.

6 ¶ The LORD said also unto me, in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which [p]backsliding Israel hath done? [q]she is gone up upon every high mountain, and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot.

the comfort and relief they stand in need of, and they have it freely." God is their "Fountain of life," Ps. xxxvi. 9. There is in him an all-sufficiency of grace and strength; all our springs are in him and our streams from him; to forsake him is, in effect, to deny this; he has been to us a bountiful Benefactor, a "Fountain of living waters," overflowing, ever-flowing, in the gifts of his favour; to forsake him is to refuse to acknowledge his kindness, and to withhold that tribute of love and praise, which his kindness calls for. 2. They have cheated themselves; they forsook "their own mercies;" but it was for lying vanities; they took a great deal of pains to "hew them out cisterns," to dig pits or pools in the earth or rock, which they would carry water to, or which should receive the rain; but they proved "broken cisterns," false at the bottom, so that they could "hold no water." When they came to quench their thirst there, they found nothing but mud and mire, and the filthy sediment of a standing lake. Such idols were to their worshippers, and such a change did they experience, who turned from God to them. If we make an idol of any creature, wealth, or pleasure, or honour, if we place our happiness in it, and promise ourselves the comfort and satisfaction in it which are to be had in God only, if we make it our joy and love, our hope and confidence, we shall find it a "cistern" which we take a great deal of pains to hew out and fill, and at the best it will hold but a little water, and that dead and flat, and soon corrupting, and become nauseous. Nay, it is a "broken" cistern, that cracks and cleaves in hot weather, so that the water is gone when we have most need of it, Job vi. 15. Let us, therefore, with purpose of heart, cleave to the Lord only, for whither else "shall we go?" He has the "words of eternal life."

FRANTIC LOVE OF SIN.—Ver. 23. The people were violent and eager in the pursuit of their idolatries, doated on their idols, and were fond of new ones, and they would not be restrained from them, neither by the word of God, nor by his providences; so strong was the impetus with which they were carried out after this sin. They are here compared to a "swift dromedary traversing her ways," a female of that species of creatures hunting about for a male, and to the same purport, a "wild ass used to the wilderness," ver. 24, not tamed by labour, and therefore very wanton, "snuffing up the wind at her pleasure," when she comes near the he-ass, and on such an "occasion, who can turn her away?" Who can hinder her from that which she lusts after? "They that seek her" then, "will not weary themselves for her," for they know it is to no purpose; but will have a little patience till she is big with young, till that month comes which is the last of "the months that she fulfils," Job xxxix. 2, when she is heavy and unwieldy, and then "they shall find her," and she cannot outrun them. Note, 1. Eager lust is a brutish thing, and those that will not be turned away from the gratifying and indulging of it by reason, and conscience, and honour, are to be reckoned as brute beasts, and no better; such as were born, and still are, "like the wild ass's colt," let them not be looked upon as rational creatures. 2. Idolatry is strangely intoxicating, and those that are addicted to it will with great difficulty be cured of it. That lust is as headstrong as any other. 3. There are some so violently set upon the prosecution of their lusts, that it is to no purpose to attempt to give check to them: they that do it, weary themselves in vain. "Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone." 4. The time will come when the most fierce will be tamed, and the most wanton will be manageable; when distress and anguish come upon them, then their ears will be open to discipline, that is "the month" in which "you may find them," Ps. cxli. 5, 6.—Henry.

DIVINE REMONSTRANCE.—Ver. 33—37. The Lord here inquired of the people why they imitated the harlots, who used every artifice to allure, and turned every way to meet the companions of their shameful amours; for thus the Jews assiduously employed themselves in devising and embracing new idolatries. They not only were acquainted with the worst practices of the heathens, but refined upon them, and became teachers of professed idolaters in these infamous mysteries. The word rendered "trimmest" is literally, "makest good," which some understand of their plausibly excusing their conduct, though they were so notoriously wicked.—They had also shed the innocent blood, both of their children, which they sacrificed to Moloch; of the prophets who reproved them for their sins; and of the Lord's decided worshippers: and these abominations were not committed in secret, or carefully concealed; but the marks of them were evidently to be seen on the skirts of their garments, and their guilt defiled every thing they did. Yet they would still persist in justifying themselves; and they had a presumptuous confidence in God, as if he were, or soon would be reconciled to them. But he would "enter into judgment with them," or "denounce sentence against" them on that very account; for in saying that they had not sinned, they affronted the God of truth in the grossest manner, 1 John i. 10. It was also undeniable that they had not renounced their idolatrous connections and confidences, but now expected help from Egypt, as they formerly had done from Assyria, and resembled an adulterous woman, that gads about from one paramour to another. Therefore the Lord was determined to put them to shame: and they should go forth from Pharaoh with every expression of disconsolation; nay, they should go into captivity in the deepest distress and anguish; for the Lord was displeased with their confidence, and had determined never to prosper them in their evil ways.—Scott.

7 And I said, after she had done all these things, [r]Turn thou unto me; but she returned not. And [s]her treacherous sister Judah saw it.[2]

8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery, I had put her away, [u]and given her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also.

9 And it came to pass through the [†]lightness of her whoredom, that [y]she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks.

10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah [a]hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but [‡]feignedly, saith the LORD.

11 And the LORD said unto me, [b]The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

12 ¶ Go, and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, [c]Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the LORD; [f]and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you: [g]for I am merciful, saith the LORD, and I will not keep anger for ever.

13 Only [h]acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the LORD thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the LORD.

14 Turn, O backsliding children, saith the LORD, for I am married unto you: and I will take you, one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

15 And [m]I will give you pastors according to mine heart, [n]which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.

16 And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the LORD, they shall say no more, [q]The ark of the covenant of the LORD; neither shall it come [§]to mind,[3] neither shall they remember it, neither shall they visit it, neither shall [‖]that be done any more.

17 At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the LORD; [s]and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the LORD, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the [*]imagination of their evil heart.

18 In those days [x]the house of Judah shall walk [†]with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north, to the land that I have [‡]given for an inheritance unto your fathers.

19 But I said, [z]How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a [§]pleasant land, a [‖]goodly heritage of the hosts of nations? and I said, Thou shalt call me, My Father;[4] and [d]shalt not turn away [*]from me.

20 ¶ Surely as a wife treacherously departeth from her [†]husband, [e]so have ye dealt treacherously with me, O house of Israel, saith the LORD.

21 A voice was heard upon the high places, weeping and supplications of the children of Israel: for they have perverted their way, [h]and they have forgotten the LORD their God.

22 [i]Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings. Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the LORD our God.

23 Truly [l]in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains: truly [m]in the LORD our God is the salvation of Israel.

24 For shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers from our youth;[5] their flocks and their herds, their sons and their daughters.

25 We lie down in our shame, and our confusion covereth us: [p]for we have sinned against the LORD our God, we and our fathers, from our youth even unto this day, [r]and have not obeyed the voice of the LORD our God.

2 And thou [e]shalt swear,[1] The LORD liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; [f]and the nations shall bless themselves in him, [g]and in him shall they glory.

3 ¶ For thus saith the LORD to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, [h]Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns.

4 Circumcise[2] yourselves to the LORD, [i]and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem; [k]lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

as theirs; "Wilt thou not cry unto me, my Father, thou art the guide of my youth?" 1. They will surely come toward him "as a Father," to beg his pardon for their undutiful conduct to him, ("Father, I have sinned,") and will hope to find in him the tender compassions of a Father towards a returning prodigal. They will come to him as a Father, to whom they will make their complaints, and in whom they will put their confidence for relief and succour. They will now own him as their father, and themselves "fatherless" without him; and therefore hoping to "find mercy" with him, as those penitents, Hos. xiv. 3. 2. They will come to him as "the Guide of their youth," as their Husband; for so that relation is described, Mal. ii. 14. "Though thou hast gone after 'many lovers,' surely thou wilt at length remember the love of thine espousals, and return to the 'husband of thy youth.'" Or, it may be taken more generally, as "my Father," thou "art the guide of my youth." Youth needs a guide. In our return to God, we must thankfully "remember" that he "was the Guide of our youth," in the way of comfort; and we must faithfully covenant that he shall be "our Guide" from henceforward in the way of duty, and that we will follow his guidance, and give up ourselves entirely to it; that in all doubtful cases we will be determined by our religion.

INVITATION OF MERCY. Ver. 12.—Here is an invitation given to "backsliding Israel," and in them to the backsliding Gentiles, to "return unto God," the God from whom they had revolted; "Return, thou backsliding Israel." And again, ver. 14, "'Turn, O backsliding children,' repent of your backslidings, return to your allegiance; come back to that good way which you have missed, and out of which you have turned aside." Pursuant to this invitation, 1. They are encouraged to return; "Repent and be converted, and your sins shall be blotted out," Acts iii. 19. You have incurred God's displeasure, but return to me, and "I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you." God's anger is ready to fall upon sinners, as a lion falls on his prey, and there is none to deliver; as a mountain of lead falling on them, to sink them past recovery into the lowest hell. But if they repent, it shall be turned away, Isa. xii. 1. "I will not keep mine anger for ever," but will be reconciled, "for I am merciful." We that are sinful were for ever undone, if God were not merciful; but the goodness of his nature encourages us to hope that if we, by repentance, undo what we have done against him, he will by a pardon unsay what he has said against us. 2. They are directed how to return, ver. 13, "'Only acknowledge thine iniquity,' own thyself in a fault, and thereby take shame to thyself, and give glory to God." "I will not keep my anger for ever," (that is a previous promise;) you shall be delivered from that anger of God which is everlasting, from the wrath to come; but upon what terms? Very easy and reasonable ones. "Only acknowledge thy sins;" if "we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive them." This will aggravate the condemnation of sinners, that the terms of pardon and peace were brought so low, and yet they would not come up to them. "If the prophet had bid them do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? How much more when he says, Only acknowledge thine iniquity."

WONDERFUL LOVE.—Ver. 19. God asks, "How shall I" do this for thee? Not as if God showed favour with reluctancy, as he punishes with a "How shall I give thee up?" Hos. xi. 8, 9. No, though he is slow to anger, he is swift to show mercy. But it intimates that we are utterly unworthy of his favours, that we have no reason to expect them, that there is nothing in us to deserve them, that we can lay no claim to them, and that he contrives how to do it in such a way as may save the honour of his justice and holiness in the government of the world; "means" must be "devised, that his banished be not for ever expelled from him," 2 Sam. xiv. 14. How shall I do it? 1. Even backsliders, if they return and repent, shall be "put among the children;" and who could ever have expected that? "Behold, what manner of love is this!" 1 John iii. 1. How should we, who are so mean and weak, so worthless and unworthy, and so provoking, ever be "put among the children?" 2. Those whom God puts among the children, to them he will "give the pleasant land," the land of Canaan, that glory of all lands, "that goodly heritage of the hosts of nations," which nations and their hosts wish for, and prefer to their own country; or which the hosts of the nations have now got possession of: it was a type of heaven, where there are "pleasures for evermore."—Henry.

CHAP. IV. COUNSELS TO REFORMATION.—Ver. 3, 4. "Break up your fallow-ground. Plough to yourselves a ploughing," or, "'Plough up your plough-land,' that you 'sow not among thorns,' that you may not labour in vain, for your own safety and welfare, as those that do that, 'sow' good seed 'among thorns,' and as you have been doing a great while. Put yourselves into a frame fit to receive mercy from God, and put away all that which keeps it from you, and then you may expect to receive mercy, and to prosper in your endeavours to help yourselves." Note, 1. An unconvinced, unhumbled heart, is like "fallow-ground," ground untilled, unoccupied. It is "ground" capable of improvement; it is our ground, let out to us, and we must be accountable for it; but it is "fallow;" it is "unfenced," and lies common, it is "unfruitful," and of no advantage to the owner, and (which is principally intended) it is overgrown with "thorns" and weeds, which are the natural product of the corrupt heart, if it be not renewed with grace. Rain and sunshine are lost upon it, Heb. vi. 7, 8. 2. We are concerned to get this fallow-ground ploughed up: we must search into our own hearts, let the word of God "divide" (as the plough does) "between the joints and the marrow," Heb. iv. 12. They must do and [q]the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way; he is gone forth from his place [r]to make thy land desolate; and thy cities shall be laid waste without an inhabitant.

8 For [s]this gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl: for [t]the fierce anger of the LORD is not turned back from us.

9 And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the LORD, that the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder.

10 Then said I, Ah, Lord GOD! [u]surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, [v]Ye shall have peace; whereas [b]the sword reacheth unto the soul.

11 At that time shall it be said to this people and to Jerusalem, A [c]dry wind[3] of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of my people, not to fan, nor to cleanse, 12 Even [x]a full wind from those places shall come unto me: now also will I [y]give sentence against them.

13 Behold, [z]he shall come up as clouds, and [a]his chariots shall be as a whirlwind: [b]his horses are swifter than eagles. [c]Woe unto us! for we are spoiled.

14 O Jerusalem, [d]wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved: [e]how long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?

15 For [f]a voice declareth from Dan, and publisheth affliction from mount Ephraim.

16 Make [g]ye mention to the nations; behold, publish against Jerusalem, [h]that watchers come [i]from a far country, [k]and give out their voice against the cities of Judah.

17 As keepers of a field,[4] are they against her round about; [l]because she hath been rebellious against me, saith the LORD.

18 Thy way and [m]thy doings have procured these things unto thee: this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, [n]because it reacheth unto thine heart.

19 ¶ My bowels, [o]my bowels! I am pained at [p]my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me: I cannot hold my peace, [q]because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war.

20 [r]Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled: [s]suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment.

21 How long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet?

22 For [t]my people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, and they have none understanding: [u]they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge.

23 I [v]beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light.

24 I beheld the mountains,[5] and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly.

25 I beheld, and, lo, [b]there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled.

26 I beheld, and, lo, [w]the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the LORD, and by his fierce anger.

27 For thus hath the LORD said, [k]The whole land shall be desolate; yet will I not make a full end.

28 For this shall [m]the earth mourn, and [n]the heavens above be black: because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it.

29 The whole city [p]shall flee for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen; they shall go into thickets, and climb up upon the rocks: [r]every city shall be forsaken, and not a man dwell therein

30 And [s]when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? Though thou clothest thyself with crimson, though thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, though thou rentest[6] thy [x]face with painting, [u]in vain shalt thou make thyself fair; thy lovers will despise thee, they will seek thy life.

31 For [z]I have heard a voice as of a woman in travail, and the anguish as of her that bringeth forth her first child; [y]the voice of the daughter of Zion, that bewaileth herself, that spreadeth her hands, saying, Woe is me now! for my soul is wearied because of murderers.

CHAP. V.

The judgments of God upon the Jews for their manifold corruptions.

RUN ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof,[1] if ye can find a man, [c]if there be any that executeth judgment, [d]that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it.

2 And though they say, [e]The LORD liveth; surely they swear falsely.

3 O LORD, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: [h]they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return.

4 Therefore I said, [i]Surely these are poor; they are foolish: for they know not the way of the LORD, nor the judgment of their God.

5 I will [k]get me unto the great men, and that to their souls, which was done to their bodies when they were taken into the covenant with God; ver. 4. "'Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskin of your heart.' Mortify the flesh and the lusts of it. Pare off that 'superfluity of naughtiness,' which hinders your 'receiving with meekness the engrafted word,' James i. 21. Boast not of, and rest not in, the circumcision of the body, for that is but a sign, and will not serve without the 'thing signified.' It is a 'dedicated' sign. Do that in sincerity, which was done in profession by your circumcision."

VISION OF DESTRUCTION.—Ver. 23—28. The prophet in vision saw the extent and extremity of this destruction, and he here gives a most lively description of it, which one would think might have made those uneasy in their sins, who dwelt in a land doomed to such a ruin, which might yet have been prevented by their repentance. 1. The earth is "without form, and void," as it was Gen. i. 2. It is "Tohu" and "Bohu," the words there used, as far as the land of Judea goes. It is 'confusion" and "emptiness," stripped of all its beauty, void of all its wealth, and, compared with what it was, every thing out of place and out of shape. To a worse chaos than this will the earth be reduced at the end of time, when it, and "all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up." 2. The "heavens" too are "without light," as the earth without fruits. This alludes to the "darkness" that was "upon the face of the deep," Gen. i. 2, and represents God's displeasure against them, as the eclipse of the sun did at our Saviour's death. It was not only the earth that failed them, but "heaven" also frowned upon them; and with their "trouble" they had "darkness," for they could not see through their troubles. The smoke of their houses and cities which the enemy burned, and the dust which their army raised in its march, even darkened the sun, so that "the heavens had no light." Or, it may be taken figuratively; "The earth" (that is, the common people) was impoverished, and in confusion; and the "heavens" (that is, the princes and rulers) "had no light," no wisdom in themselves, nor were any comfort to the people, nor a guide to them. Compare Matt. xxiv. 29. 3. The "mountains trembled," and "the hills moved lightly," ver. 24; so formidable were the appearances of God against his people, as in the days of old they had been for them, that "the mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs," Ps. cxiv. 4. The "everlasting mountains" seemed to be "scattered," Hab. iii. 6. The mountains "on which" they had worshipped their idols, the mountains "over which" they had looked for succours, all "trembled, as if they had been conscious of the people's guilt. The "mountains," those among them that seemed to be highest and strongest, and of the firmest resolution, trembled at the approach of the Chaldean army. The hills "moved lightly," as being eased of the burthen of a "sinful nation," Isa. i. 24. 4. Not the earth only, but the air was dispeopled and left uninhabited, ver. 25. "I beheld" the cities, the countries that used to be populous, "and lo, there was no man" to be seen; all the inhabitants were either killed, or fled or taken captives, such a ruining, depopulating thing is sin: nay, even "the birds of the heavens," that used to fly about, and "sing among the branches," were now "fled" away, and no more to be seen or heard. The "land of Judah" is now become like the "lake of Sodom," over which (they say) no bird flies; see Deut. xxix. 23. The enemies shall make such havoc of the country, that they shall not so much as leave a bird alive in it. 5. Both the ground and the houses shall be laid waste, ver. 26. "Lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness," being deserted by the inhabitants that should cultivate it, and then soon overgrown with thorns and briers; or, being trodden down by the destroying army of the enemy. The "cities" also, and their gates and walls are "broken down," and levelled with the ground. Those that look no further than second causes, impute it to the policy and fury of the invaders; but the prophet, who looked to the first Cause, says that it is "at the presence of the Lord," at "his face," the anger of his countenance, even "by his fierce anger," that this was done. Even angry men cannot do us any real hurt, unless God be "angry" with us. If our ways "please him," all is well.—Henry.

CHAP. V. UNIVERSAL DEPRAVITY.—Ver. 1, 2. We are not informed at what time this message was delivered: if it could be supposed to have been in the latter part of Josiah's reign, it might serve to explain the mystery of Providence, in removing so prematurely that pious king. Yet it can scarcely be conceived that the external conduct of the Jews was so very bad during his life; and, therefore, it may perhaps be referred to the time immediately succeeding his death, when their wickedness burst forth the more impetuously, for the temporary restraint that had been put upon it.—The Lord speaks to the prophet, and a very few others who interceded for the people; and directs them to make a diligent and accurate survey of Jerusalem, of her streets and broad places, where business was transacted, and where justice should have been administered, and let them see whether they could find a man that executed justice and sought the truth; and if they could, he would for his sake pardon the city. Their depravity was so universal, that none could be found who either did justice to man, or inquired after the truth and will of God. If any such characters remained, they were driven into obscurity, and were afraid to show themselves. Especially not one could be met with among the rulers and priests, who acted as a pious and upright man, in the important duties of his station: and even the few, who professed themselves the worshippers of Jehovah, and sware by his name, scrupled not to commit perjury, and to use that solemn act of will speak unto them; for they have known the way of the LORD, and the judgment of their God: but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds.

6 Wherefore a lion[z] out of the forest shall slay them, and a wolf of the *evenings shall spoil them, a leopard shall watch over their cities: every one that goeth out thence shall be torn in pieces: because their transgressions are many, and their backslidings are †increased.

7 ¶ [p]How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me, and [q]sworn by them that are no gods: when I had fed them to the full, [r]they then committed adultery,[s] and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses.

8 They were as fed horses in the morning: [x]every one neighed after his neighbour's wife.

9 Shall [y]I not visit for these things? saith the LORD; [z]and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

10 ¶ Go ye up upon her walls, and destroy; but make not a full end: take away her battlements; for they are not the LORD'S.

11 For the house of Israel and the house of Judah have [d]dealt very treacherously against me, saith the LORD.

12 They [e]have belied the LORD, and said, It is not he; [f]neither shall evil come upon us; neither shall we see sword nor famine:

13 And the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them: thus shall it be done unto them.

14 Wherefore thus saith the Lord GOD of hosts, Because ye speak this word, behold, [h]I will make my words in thy mouth fire,[4] and this people wood, and it shall devour them.

15 Lo, [i]I will bring a nation upon you from far, O house of Israel, saith the LORD: it is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation, [m]a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say.

16 Their quiver is as an open sepulchre,[5] they are all mighty men.

17 And [o]they shall eat up thine harvest and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters should eat; they shall eat up thy flocks and thine herds; they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig-trees; they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword.

18 Nevertheless in those days, saith the LORD, I will not make a full end with you.

19 And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, Wherefore doeth the LORD our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, [s]Like as ye have forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land; so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours.

worship to cloak their iniquity; and hesitated not to violate the vows which they had thus ratified.—Scott.

ITS PUNISHMENT.—Ver. 9. "'Shall I not visit for these things?' Can you yourselves think that the God whose name is 'Jealous,' will let such idolatries go unpunished, or, that a God of infinite purity will connive at such abominable uncleanness?" These are "things" that must be reckoned for, else the honour of God's government cannot be maintained, nor his laws saved from contempt; but sinners will be tempted to think him "altogether such a one as themselves," contrary to that conviction of their own consciences concerning the judgments of God, which is necessary to be supported, That they which do "such things, are worthy of death," Rom. i. 32. Observe, when God punishes sin, he is said to visit for it, or inquire into it; for he weighs the cause before he passes sentence. Sinners have reason to expect punishment, upon the account of God's holiness, to which sin is highly offensive, as well as upon the account of his justice, to which it renders us obnoxious; this is intimated in that, "Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" It is not only the word of God, but his soul, that takes vengeance. And he has national judgments wherewith to take vengeance for national sins. "Such nations as this" was, cannot long go unpunished.—Henry.

INVASION BY THE CHALDEANS PREDICTED.—Ver. 15—18. The Jews had in former times been principally oppressed by the adjacent nations; but the Chaldeans came from a great distance, having subjugated all their former oppressors, and become exceedingly powerful. The building of Babylon was begun soon after the flood; and we read of the Chaldeans in the book of Job, which is supposed to have been written as early as the time of Moses, Job i. 17; though the Chaldean monarchy had but lately been established.—God would bring this mighty nation upon them, to inflict the vengeance predicted by Moses; and as they used another language, which the Jews did not understand, they would be more regardless of their complaints and cruel in their oppressions. When they opened their quivers, destruction would be the certain consequence; as the opening of a sepulchre denotes that death has taken place; and thus they would endure every misery, as far as consisted with their escaping total extirpation.—Some indeed suppose this to mean, that God would still have further judgments in reserve for them. "For all this his anger is not turned away; but his hand is stretched out still." In either sense it is a most remarkable prediction.—The vengeance executed on the Jews for crucifying the Lord of glory, was far more terrible, and has been of vastly longer continuance, than that brought upon them by the Chaldeans: and yet a full end has not been made of the nation, which is at present exceedingly numerous, and is preserved distinct from other nations, no doubt for some very important purpose in Providence.—Scott.

MELANCHOLY APOSTACY.—Ver. 30, 31. "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land." The degeneracy of such a people, so privileged and advanced, was a "wonderful thing." How could they ever break through so many obligations? It was a "horrible" thing, and to be "detested," and the consequences of it "dreaded." To frighten ourselves from sin, let us call it a "horrible" thing. What was the matter? In short, this: 1. The leaders misled the people; "The prophets prophesy falsely," counterfeit a commission from heaven, when they are factors for hell. Religion is never more dangerously attacked than under colour and pretence of divine revelation. But why did not the priests, who had power in their hands for that purpose, restrain these false prophets? Alas! instead of doing that, they made use of them as the tools of their ambition and tyranny; they "bear rule by their means;" they supported themselves in their grandeur and wealth, their laziness and luxury, their impositions and oppressions, by the help of the "false prophets," and their interest in the people. Thus they were in a combination against every thing that was good, and strengthened one another's hands in evil. 2. The people were well enough pleased to be misled; "They are my people," says God, "and should have stood up 'for me,' and borne their testimony against the wickedness of their priests and prophets; but they 'love to have it so.'" If the priests and prophets will let them alone in their sins, they will give them no disturbance in theirs. They love to be ridden with a loose rein, and like those rulers very well, that will not restrain their lusts, and those teachers that will not reprove them.—Henry.

CHAP. VI. CHALDEAN CRUELTY.—Ver. 4—8. The Lord here commissions the Chaldeans to prepare war against Jerusalem, and immediately they are represented as all in earnest and in motion, exciting each other to despatch, lamenting that the least time is lost, and beginning or continuing their march even during the night, as in haste to destroy her palaces. The Lord purposed that they should execute his judgments on that city, which was to be visited for her oppression and impiety; and they were as effectually induced to besiege it, as if he had headed their troops, and given the word of command. The wicked lives of the inhabitants sprang from their corrupt principles and depraved affections, as naturally and plentifully as waters from the fountain; the cries of those who suffered violence and oppression were continually heard in the city, and the Lord meditated to repay their wickedness with grief and wounds.—Scott.

FALSE PEACE.—Ver. 14. They have "healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly," or, "according to the cure of some slight hurt;" skinning over the wound, and never searching it to the bottom: applying lenitives only, when there was need of cor-

6 ¶ For thus hath the LORD of hosts said, [n]Hew ye down trees, [o]and [†]cast a mount against Jerusalem: [p]this is the city to be visited; she is wholly oppression in the midst of her.

7 As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: [q]violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds.

8 Be [t]thou instructed, O Jerusalem, [u]lest my soul [‡]depart from thee; [x]lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, They shall throughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine: turn back thine hand as a grapegatherer into the baskets.

10 To whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? Behold, [a]their ear is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken:[3] behold, [b]the word of the LORD is unto them a reproach; they have no delight in it.

11 Therefore [c]I am full of the fury of the LORD; I am weary with holding in: [d]I will pour it out upon the children abroad, and upon the assembly of young men together: [e]for even the husband with the wife shall be taken, the aged with him that is full of days.

12 And [f]their houses shall be turned unto others, with their fields and wives together: for [g]I will stretch out my hand upon the inhabitants of the land, saith the LORD.

13 For from the least of them even unto the greatest of them, every one is given to covetousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely.

14 They have healed also [§]the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly,[4] saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

15 Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush; therefore they shall fall among them that fall: [n]at the time that I visit them they shall be cast down, saith the LORD.

16 Thus saith the LORD, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and [q]ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, [r]We will not walk therein.

17 Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

18 ¶ Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them.

19 Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, [s]because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it.

20 To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country?[5] [d]your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me.

21 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, [e]I will lay stumblingblocks before this people, [f]and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish.

22 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, [g]a people cometh from the north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth.

23 They shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy: their voice roareth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men for war against thee, O daughter of Zion.

24 We have heard the fame thereof: our hands wax feeble: [m]anguish hath taken hold of us, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

25 Go not forth into the field, nor walk by the way; for [o]the sword of the enemy and fear is on every side.

26 ¶ O daughter of my people, [p]gird thee with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes; make thee mourning, as for an only son, most bitter lamentation: [r]for the spoiler shall suddenly come upon us.

27 I [s]have set thee for a tower and a fortress among my people, that thou mayest know and try their way.

28 They are [t]all grievous revolters, [u]walking with slanders: [x]they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters.[6]

29 The bellows are burned, the lead is consumed of the fire; [y]the founder melteth [z]in vain; for the wicked are not plucked away.

rosives; soothing people in their sins, and giving them opiates, to make them easy for the present, while the disease was preying upon the vitals. They said, "'Peace, peace,' all shall be well." If there were some thinking people among them, who were awake and apprehensive of danger, they soon stopped their mouths with their priestly and prophetical authority, boldly averring that neither church nor state was in any danger, when "there is no peace," because they went on in their idolatries and daring impieties. Note, Those are to be reckoned our false friends, that is, our worst and most dangerous enemies, who flatter us in a sinful way.

THE GOOD OLD PATHS.—Ver. 16. Ask for the "old paths," the paths prescribed by the law of God, the written word, that true standard of antiquity. Ask for "the paths" that the patriarchs travelled in before you, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob: and, as you hope to inherit the promises made to them, tread in their steps. Ask for "the old paths; Where is the good way?" We must not be guided merely by antiquity, as if the plea of prescription and long usage were alone sufficient to justify our path; no, there is an "old way which wicked men have trodden," Job xxii. 15. But when we ask for the old paths, it is only in order to find out the "good way," the highway of the upright. Note, The way of religion and godliness is a "good old way;" the way that all the saints in all ages have walked in. 1. He would have them to resolve to act according to the result of these inquiries; "When you have found out which is the good way, 'walk therein;' practise accordingly, keep close to that way, proceed and persevere in it. Some make this counsel to be given them with reference to the struggles that were between the true and false prophets, between those that said they should have peace, and those that told them trouble was at the door; they pretended they knew not which to believe; "Stand in the way," says God, "and see, and inquire, which of these two agrees with the written word, and the usual methods of God's providence, which of these directs you to the good way, and do accordingly." 2. He assures them, that, if they do thus, it will secure the welfare and satisfaction of their own souls; "'Walk in the good old way,' and you will find that your walking in that way will be easy and pleasant; you will enjoy both your God and yourselves, and the way will lead you to true rest. Though it cost you some pains to walk in that way, you will find an abundant recompense at your journey's end." 3. He laments that this good counsel, which was so rational in itself, and so proper for them, could not find acceptance; "'But they said, We will not walk therein.' Not only, we will not be at the pains to inquire 'which is the good way,' the 'good old way.'"

REPROBATE SILVER.—Ver. 29—30. "The bellows" have been still kept so near the fire to blow it, that they "are burut" with the heat of it, or they are quite worn out with long use, and thrown into the fire as good for nothing. The prophets have preached their throats sore with "crying aloud" against the sins of Israel, and yet they are not convinced and humbled. The "lead," which was then used in refining silver, as quicksilver is now, "is consumed of the fire," and has not done its work: for "the founder melts in vain," his labour is lost, for "the wicked are not plucked away," no care is taken to separate between the precious and the vile, to purge out the "old leaven," to cast out of communion those who, being corrupt themselves, are in danger of infecting others. Or, "Their wickednesses are not removed," (so some read it,) they are still as bad as ever, and nothing will prevail to part between them and their sins; they will not be brought off from their idolatries and immoralities by all they have heard, and all they have felt, of the wrath of God against them. And therefore that doom is passed upon them, ver. 30. "Reprobate silver shall they be called," useless, and worthless; they glitter as if they had some silver in them, but there is nothing of real virtue or goodness to be found among them, and for this reason the "Lord has rejected them." He will no more own them as his people, nor look for any good from them; he will "take them away like dross," Ps. cxix. 119, and prepare a consuming fire for those that would not be purified by a refining fire.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. FALSE PROFESSION.—Ver. 4. "'Trust not in lying words;' you are told in what way, and upon what terms, you may be easy, safe, and happy; now do not flatter yourselves with an opinion that you may be so on any other terms, or in any other way." Yet, he charges them with this self-deceit arising from vanity; ver. 8, "'Behold,' it is plain that 'you' do 'trust in lying words,' notwithstanding what is said to you: you trust in 'words that cannot profit;' you rely upon a plea that will stand you in no stead." They that slight the words of truth, which would profit them, take shelter in words of falsehood, which cannot profit them. Now these lying words were, "'The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, are these.' These buildings, the courts, the holy place, and the holy of holies, are the 'temple of the Lord,' built by his appointment, to his glory; here he resides, here he is worshipped, here we meet three times a-year to pay our homage to him as our King in his palace." This they thought was security enough to them to keep God and his favours from leaving them, God and his judgments from breaking in upon them. When the prophets told them how sinful they were, and how miserable they were likely to be still, they appealed to the temple; "How can we be either so or so, as long as we have that holy happy place among us?" The prophet repeats it because they repeated it upon all occasions. It was the cant of the times, it was in their mouths upon all occasions. If they heard an

3 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [d]Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place.

4 [e]Trust ye not in lying words, saying, [f]The temple of the LORD, The temple of the LORD, The temple of the LORD, are these.[1]

5 For [g]if ye throughly amend your ways and your doings; [h]if ye throughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour;

6 If ye [i]oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, [k]and shed not innocent blood in this place, [l]neither walk after other gods to your hurt;

7 Then [m]will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, for ever and ever.

8 ¶ Behold, [n]ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit.

9 Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not;

10 And come and stand before me in this house, *which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?

11 Is this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers in your eyes? Behold, [o]even I have seen it, saith the LORD.

12 But go ye now unto [x]my place which was in Shiloh, [y]where I set my name at the first, [z]and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel.

13 And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the LORD, [a]and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; [b]and I called you, but ye answered not;

14 Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, [d]as I have done to Shiloh.

15 And [e]I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even [f]the whole seed of Ephraim.[2]

16 Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee.

17 ¶ Seest [h]thou not what they do in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

18 The [i]children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes[3] to the [†]queen of heaven, and [k]to pour out drink-offerings unto other gods, [l]that they may provoke me to anger.

19 Do [m]they provoke me to anger? saith the LORD: do they not provoke themselves, to the confusion of their own faces?

20 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [n]Behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground; and it shall burn, [o]and shall not be quenched.

21 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; [p]Put your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.

22 For I spake not unto your fathers,[4] nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning [‡]burnt-offerings or sacrifices:

23 But this thing commanded I them, saying, [r]Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, [s]that it may be well unto you.

24 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but [u]walked in the counsels and in the [§]imagination of their evil heart, and [l]went [x]backward, and not forward.[5]

25 Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have even [z]sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them.

26 Yet [*]they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, [b]but hardened their neck; [c]they did worse than their fathers.

27 Therefore thou shalt speak all these words unto them; [e]but they will not hearken to thee: thou shalt also call unto them; but they will not answer thee.

28 But thou shalt say unto them, This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the LORD their God, nor receiveth *correction: truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

29 ¶ Cut off thine hair,[6] O Jerusalem, and cast it away, [f]and take up a lamentation on high places; [k]for the LORD hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath.

30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the LORD: [m]they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.

31 And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, [p]to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; [q]which I commanded them not, neither [†]came it into my heart.

32 ¶ Therefore, behold, the days come, awakening sermon, if any startling piece of news was brought upon them, they lulled themselves asleep again with this, "We cannot but do well, for we have 'the temple of the Lord among us.'"—Henry.

DESOLATION OF SHILOH.—Ver. 12—15. The tabernacle and ark of God had been long stationed at Shiloh; till at length the impiety of Eli's sons, and the wickedness of the people, provoked God to give up the ark into captivity: then it was finally removed from Shiloh, which was afterwards reduced, or desolated. Yet the inhabitants of that city had had as good ground to presume, that God would preserve them for the sake of his sanctuary, as the inhabitants of Jerusalem now had; especially as the latter were become still more abandoned, in the midst of more abundant means and advantages. Accordingly the Lord assured them, that he would deal with Jerusalem, as he had with Shiloh; destroying the temple, removing all the sacred utensils, and utterly desolating the city; and that he would drive the inhabitants out of their favoured land, into heathen countries, as he had done the Israelites: banishing them, as it were, from the sight of his eyes.—Scott.

PROVOKING SIN.—Ver. 18. Their idolatrous respects were paid to the "queen of heaven," the moon, either in an image, or in the original, or both; they worshipped it, probably, under the name of Ashtaroth, or some other of their goddesses, being in love with "the brightness" in which they saw the moon walk, and thinking themselves indebted to her for her benign influences, or fearing her malignant ones, Job xxxi. 26. The worshipping of the moon was much in use among the heathen nations, Jer. xliv. 17, 19. Some read it the frame or workmanship of heaven; the whole celestial globe with all its ornaments and powers was the object of their adoration. They "worshipped the host of heaven," Acts vii. 42. The homage they should have paid to their Prince, they paid to their statues that beautified the frontispiece of his palace; they worshipped the creatures instead of him that made them, the servants instead of him that commands them, and the gifts instead of him that gave them. "With the queen of heaven" they worshipped "other gods," images of things not only in "heaven above, but in earth beneath," and "in the waters under the earth:" for those that forsake "the true God," wander "endlessly" after false ones. To these deities of their own making they offer "cakes" for meat-offerings, and "pour out drink-offerings," as if they had their meat and drink from them, and were obliged to make to them their acknowledgments: and see how busy they are, and how every hand is employed in the service of these idols, according as they used to be employed in their domestic services. "The children" were sent to "gather wood, the fathers kindled the fire" to heat the oven, being of the poorer sort, that could not afford to keep servants to do it, yet they would rather do it themselves than it should be undone; "the women kneaded the dough" with their own hands, for perhaps though they had servants to do it, they took a pride in showing their zeal for their idols by doing it themselves. Let us be instructed even by this bad example, in the service of our God.

TOPHET.—Ver. 32, 33. Sin reigns unto death, for that is the wages of it, the end of those things. Tophet, the valley adjoining to Jerusalem, "shall be called the valley of slaughter," for there multitudes shall be "slain," when, in their sallies out of the city, and their attempts to escape, they fall into the hands of the besiegers. Or, it shall be called "the valley of slaughtered ones," because thither the corpses of those that are slain shall be brought to be buried, all other burying places being full; and there they shall bury "until there be no" more "place" to make a grave. This intimates the multitude of those that shall die by the sword, pestilence, and famine; death shall ride on prosperously with dreadful pomp and power, "conquering and to conquer. The slain of the Lord shall be many." This valley of Tophet was a place where the citizens of Jerusalem walked to take the air; but it shall now be spoiled for that use, for it shall be so full of graves, that there shall be no walking there, because of the danger of contracting a ceremonial pollution by the touch of a grave. There it was that they sacrificed some of their children, and dedicated others to Moloch, and there they should fall as victims to divine justice. Tophet had formerly been the burying-place, or burning-place, of the dead bodies of the besiegers, when the Assyrian army was routed by an angel: and for this it was "ordained of old," Isa. xxx. 33. But they having forgotten this mercy, and made it the place of their sin, God will now turn it into a "burying-place" for the besieged. In allusion to this valley, hell is in the New Testament called Gehenna—the valley of Hinnom, for there were buried both the invading Assyrians, and the revolting Jews; so hell is a receptacle after death both for infidels and hypocrites, the open enemies of God's church, and its treacherous friends; it is "the congregation of the dead;" it is prepared for the "generation of God's wrath." But so great shall that slaughter be, that even the spacious valley of Tophet shall not be able to contain the slain; and at length there shall not be enough left alive to bury the dead, so that "the carcases of the people shall be meat" for the birds and beasts of prey, that shall feed upon them like carrion, and none shall have the concern or courage to "frighten" them "away," as Rizpah did from the dead bodies of Saul's sons, 2 Sam. xxi. 10. This was according to the threatening of the law, and a branch of the curse; Deut. xxviii. 26, "Thy carcass shall be meat to the fowls and beasts, and no man shall fray them away." Thus do the law and the prophets agree, and the execution with both. The decent burying of the dead is a piece of humanity, in remembrance of what the dead body has been—the tabersaith the LORD, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, but, The valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place.

33 And [t]the carcases of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away.

34 Then will I cause to cease[4] from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; [x]for the land shall be desolate.

AT that time, saith the LORD, they shall bring out the bones of the kings[1] of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall [b]spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, [c]whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

3 And [e]death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 ¶ Moreover thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD; [g]Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he [h]turn away, and not return?

5 Why then is this people of Jerusalem [i]slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? they [k]hold fast deceit, [l]they refuse to return.

6 I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: [n]no man repented him of his wickedness, [o]saying, What have I done? every one turned to his course, [p]as the horse rusheth into the battle.

7 Yea, [q]the stork[2] in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and [r]the turtle, and the crane, and the swallow, observe the time of their coming; but [s]my people know not the judgment of the LORD.

8 How do ye say, [t]We are wise, and [u]the law of the LORD is with us? Lo, certainly [*]in vain made he it; the pen of the scribes is in vain.

9 [†]The wise men are [x]ashamed, they are dismayed and taken: [y]lo, they have rejected the word of the LORD; and [‡]what wisdom is in them?

10 Therefore [z]will I give their wives unto others, and their fields to them that shall inherit them: [a]for every one from the least even unto the greatest is given to covetousness; [b]from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely.

11 For [c]they have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

12 Were they [d]ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: [e]therefore shall they fall among them that fall: in the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith the LORD.

13 ¶ [§]I will surely consume them, saith the LORD: [f]there shall be no grapes on the vine, nor figs on the fig-tree, and [g]the leaf shall fade; and the things that I have given them shall pass away from them.

14 [h]Why do we sit still? assemble yourselves, [i]and let us enter into the defenced cities, and [k]let us be silent there; for the LORD our God hath put us to silence, and given us [l]water of [l]gall to drink, because we have sinned against the LORD.

15 We [m]looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble!

16 The snorting of his horses [n]was heard from Dan:[3] [o]the whole land trembled [p]at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones; for they are come, and have devoured the land, and *all that is in it; the city, and those that dwell therein.

17 For, behold, [q]I will send serpents, cockatrices, among you, [r]which will not be charmed, and they shall bite you, saith the LORD.

18 ¶ When I would comfort myself against sorrow, [s]my heart is faint [†]in me.

19 [t]Behold, the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people because [‡]of them that dwell in a far country: [u]Is not the LORD in Zion? is not her king in her? [x]Why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images, and with strange vanities?

20 The [y]harvest is past,[4] the summer is ended, and we are not saved.

21 For [z]the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt; [a]I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me.

22 Is there [b]no balm in Gilead?[5] is there [c]no physician there? [d]Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people [§]recovered?

nacle of a reasonable soul. Nay, it is a piece of divinity, in expectation of what the dead body shall be at the resurrection; the want of it has sometimes been an instance of the rage of men against God's witnesses, Rev. xi. 9. Here it is threatened as an instance of the wrath of God against his enemies, and it is also an intimation that "evil pursues sinners" even after death.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. HAVOC BY THE CHALDEAN ARMY.—Ver. 1—3. When the Chaldeans had taken Jerusalem, without doubt they accomplished this prediction: and being enraged at the Jews, especially at the rulers and teachers, who had violated their treaties, and made so obstinate a resistance; they absurdly vented their indignation by abusing the bodies of the dead, as well as by massacreing the living. Thus the bones were taken from the graves, and spread before the sun, moon, and stars, and they were disgraced, and left as dung on the earth, as it were, in the presence of those creatures, whom they had worshipped and served instead of the great Creator. Their idolatry is spoken of in a variety of phrases of similar import, to show their excessive attachment to it. And the remains of Israel, (no more worthy to be called a holy nation, but an evil family,) being dispersed into distant countries, would encounter much miseries as would cause them to envy those who were slain at the taking of the city.—Some think that the Chaldeans broke open the monuments of the great men, in searching for the treasures which were frequently laid up in them.—The latter part of the second verse may more literally be rendered, "Because they loved them, and because they served them," &c. They were thus disgraced by the just judgment of God for their idolatry.—Scott.

GOD'S PEOPLE REPROVED BY THE BIRDS OF HEAVEN.—Ver. 7. 1. It is an instance of their sottishness, that, though they are "God's people," and therefore should readily understand his mind, upon every intimation of it, yet they "know not the judgment of the Lord," they apprehend not the meaning either of a mercy or of an affliction, not how to accommodate themselves to either, or to answer God's intention in either. They "know not" how to improve the seasons of grace that God affords them when he sends them his prophets, nor how to make use of the rebukes they are under when "his voice cries in the city." They "discern not the signs of the times," Matt xvi. 3, nor are aware how God is dealing with them. They know not that "way of duty" which God had prescribed them, though it be written both in their hearts and in their books. 2. It is an aggravation of their sottishness, that there is so much sagacity in the inferior creatures. "The stork in the heaven" knows her appointed times of coming and continuing; so do other season-birds, "the turtle, the crane, and the swallow;" these by a natural instinct change their quarters, as the temper of the air alters; they come when the spring comes, and are gone, we know not whither, when the winter approaches; probably into warmer climates, as some birds come with winter, and are gone when that is over.

JEREMIAH'S GRIEF FOR HIS PEOPLE.—Ver. 18. "'My heart is faint in me,' I sink, I die away at the consideration of it. 'When I would comfort myself against my sorrow,' I do but labour in vain; nay, every attempt to alleviate the grief, does but aggravate it." It is our wisdom and duty, under mournful events, to do what we can to "comfort ourselves against our sorrow," by suggesting to ourselves such considerations as are proper to allay the grief, and balance the grievance. But sometimes the sorrow is such, that, the more it is repressed, the more strongly it recoils. It may sometimes be the case of very good men, as of the prophet here, whose soul refused to be comforted, and "fainted" at the cordial, Ps. lxxvii. 2, 3. He tells, ver. 21, what was the matter; "It is 'for the hurt of the daughter of my people,' that I am thus hurt; it is for their sin, and the miseries they have brought upon themselves by it; it is for this, that I am black, that I look black, that I go in black as mourners do, and that 'astonishment has taken hold on me,' so that I know not what to do, nor which way to turn." Note, The miseries of our country ought to be very much the grief of our souls. A gracious spirit will be a public spirit, a tender spirit, a mourning spirit.

BALM IN GILEAD—Ver. 22. This verse may be understood as laying all the blame of the incurableness of their disease upon themselves; and so the question must be answered affirmatively; "Is there no balm in Gilead? No physician there?" Yes, certainly there is; God is able to help and heal them, there is a sufficiency in him to redress all their grievances. Gilead was a place in their own land, not far off; they had among themselves God's law and his prophets, with the help of which they might have been brought to repentance, and their ruin might have been prevented; they had princes and priests, whose business it was to reform the nation, and redress their grievances. What could have been done more than has been done for their recovery? "Why then is not" their health restored? certainly it was not owing to God, but to themselves; it was not for want of "balm" and a "physician," but because they would not admit the application, nor submit to the methods of cure. The physician and physic were both ready, but the patient was wilful and irregular, would not be tied to rules, but must be humoured. Note, If sinners die of their wounds, their blood is upon their own heads. The blood of Christ is "balm in Gilead," his Spirit is the "Physician there," both sufficient, all-sufficient, so that they might have been healed, but would not.—Henry.

CHAP. IX.

The prophet lamenteth the manifold sins of the people, 1, and their impending judgments, 9. Disobedience is the cause of their calamity, 12.

*OH that [a]my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!

2 Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place[1] of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people, and go from them: [d]for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.

3 And [f]they bend their tongues like their bow for lies; but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and [l]they know not me, saith the LORD.

4 Take [k]ye heed every one of his [†]neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for [l]every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour will walk with slanders.

5 And [n]they will [‡]deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have [o]taught their tongue to speak lies, and [p]weary themselves to commit iniquity.

6 Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they [r]refuse to know me, saith the LORD.

7 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them:[2] for how shall I do for the daughter of my people?

8 Their tongue is as an arrow shot out; it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but [s]in heart he layeth his [t]wait.

9 ¶ Shall [y]I not visit them for these things? saith the LORD: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

10 For [z]the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the [*]habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, [a]because they are [†]burned up, so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle;[3] [‡]both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone.

11 And [c]I will make Jerusalem heaps, and [d]a den of dragons; [e]and I will make the cities of Judah [§]desolate, without an inhabitant.

12 ¶ Who is the wise man that may understand this? and who is he to whom the mouth of the LORD hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth and is burned up like a wilderness, that none passeth through?

13 And the LORD saith, [h]Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein;

CHAP. X.

The unequal comparison of God with idols, 1. The spoil of the tabernacle by foolish pastors, 19.

HEAR ye the word which the LORD speaketh unto you, O house of Israel;

abundance, continually, and without intermission, still sending forth fresh floods of tears, as there still occur fresh occasions for them!" The same word in Hebrew signifies both "the eye" and a "fountain," as if in this land of sorrows our eyes were designed rather for "weeping" than "seeing." Jeremiah wept much, and yet wished he could weep more, that he might affect a stupid people, and rouse them to a due sense of the hand of God gone out against them. Note, It becomes us while we are here in this vale of tears, to conform to the temper of the climate, and to sow in tears. "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted" hereafter; but let them expect that while they are here, the "clouds will still return after the rain." While we find our hearts such fountains of sin, it is fit that our eyes should be fountains of tears. But Jeremiah's grief here is upon the public account; he would "weep day and night," not so much for the death of his own near relations, but for the "slain of the daughter of his people," the multitudes of his countrymen that fell by the sword of war. Note, When we hear of the numbers of "the slain" in great battles and sieges, we ought to be much affected with it, and not to make a light matter of it; yea, though they be not of the "daughter of our people," for, whatever people they are of, they are of the same human nature with us; and there are so many precious lives lost, as dear to them as ours to us, and so many precious souls gone into eternity.

MASSACRE.—Ver. 21, 22. Death shall ride in triumph, and there shall be no escaping his arrest, when he comes with commission, neither within doors nor without; not "within" doors, for let the doors be shut ever so fast, let them be ever so firmly locked and bolted, "death comes up into our windows," like a thief in the night; it steals upon us ere we are aware. Nor does it thus boldly attack the cottages only, but it is entered "into our palaces," the palaces of our princes and great men, though ever so "stately," ever so "strongly built" and guarded. Note, No palaces can keep out death. Nor are those more safe that are "abroad;" death cuts off even "the children from without," and "the young men from the streets." The children who might have been spared by the enemy in pity, because they have never been hurtful to them, and the young men who might have been spared "in policy," because capable of being serviceable to them, shall fall together by the sword. It is usual now, even in the severest military executions, to put none to the sword but those that are found in arms; but then even the boys and girls playing in the streets were sacrificed to the fury of the conqueror. Those that are slain, shall be left "unburied." "Speak, thus saith the Lord," (for the confirmation and aggravation of what was before said,) "even the carcases of men shall fall as dung," neglected, and left to be offensive [illegible] as dung is. Common humanity obliges the survivors to bury [illegible] but here such numbers shall be slain, and those so dispersed all the country over, that it shall be an endless thing to bury them all, nor shall there be hands enough to do it, nor shall the conquerors permit it, and those that should do it, shall be overwhelmed with grief, so that they shall have no heart to do it.

FALSE AND GENUINE GLORY.—Ver. 23, 24. "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom," as if with the help of that he could out-wit or countermine the enemy, or in the greatest extremity find out some evasion or other; for a man's wisdom may fail him then when he needs it most, and he may be taken in his own craftiness. Ahithophel was "befooled," and "counsellors" are often "led away spoiled." But if a man, "policies" fail him, yet surely he may gain his point by might, and dint of courage; no, "let not the strong man glory in his strength," for the battle is not always to the strong: David the strippling proves too hard for Goliath the giant. All human force is nothing "without God," worse than nothing "against him." But may not the "rich man's wealth" be "his strong city?" (Money answers all things.) No, "Let not the rich man glory in his riches," for they may prove so far from sheltering him, that they may expose him, and make him the fairer mark. Let not the people boast of the "wise men," and "mighty men," and "rich men" that they have among them, as if they could make their part good against the Chaldeans, because they have "wise men" to advise concerning the war, "mighty men" to fight their battles, and "rich men" to bear the charges of the war. He shows what we may depend upon in a day of distress. 1. Our only comfort in trouble will be, that we have done our duty. They that "refused to know God," will boast in vain of their wisdom and wealth; but they that "know God" intelligently, that "understand" aright "that he is the Lord," that have not only right apprehensions concerning his nature, and attributes and relations to man, but receive and retain the impressions of them, may "glory in this," it will be their rejoicing in the day of evil. Our only confidence in trouble will be, that, having through grace in some measure done our duty, we shall find God a God all-sufficient to us. We may "glory in this," that wherever we are, we have an acquaintance with, and an interest in, a God that "exercises loving kindness, and judgment, and righteousness, in the earth;" that is not only just to all his creatures, and will do no wrong to any of them, but kind to all his children, and will protect them, and provide for them. For "In these things I delight." God delights to show kindness, and to execute judgment himself, and is pleased with those who herein are "followers of him as dear children." Those that have such knowledge of the glory of God as to be changed into the same image, and to partake of his holiness, find it [illegible] perfection and glory; and the God they thus faithfully "confirm to," [illegible] "stands in," in their greatest straits. But the prophet [illegible] of this people took no care about this. Their "wis-

13 When he [h]uttereth his voice, there is a [*]multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to [l]ascend from the ends of the earth; he [k]maketh lightnings [†]with rain, and [l]bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

14 Every [m]man is [‡]brutish in his knowledge; [n]every founder is confounded by the graven image: [o]for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

15 They are vanity, and the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

16 The portion of Jacob is not like them: for he is [c]the former of all things; and [t]Israel is the rod of his inheritance: [u]the LORD of hosts is his name.

17 ¶ Gather up thy wares out of the land, O [§]inhabitant of the fortress:

18 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will sling out[5] the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they may find it so.

19 ¶ Woe is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, [b]Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it.

20 My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken: [d]my children are gone forth of me, and they are not: there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains.

21 For [f]the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the LORD: therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered.

22 Behold, the noise of the bruit is come, and a great commotion out of the north country, to make the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons.

23 ¶ O LORD, [k]I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.

24 O LORD, [l]correct me, but with judgment; not in thine anger, lest thou [l]bring me to nothing.

25 [m]Pour out thy fury upon the heathen[6] [n]that know thee not, and upon the families that [o]call not on thy name: for they have [p]eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate.

Jeremiah proclaimeth God's covenant, 1; he rebuketh the disobedient Jews, 8, and prophesieth evils to come upon them, 11.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem;

3 And say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [b]Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant,[1]

4 Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, [*]Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you: so shall [f]ye be my people, and I will be your God;

5 That I may perform the oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day. Then answered I, and said, [*]So be it, O LORD.

dom," and "might," and "riches," were their joy and hope, which would end in grief and despair. But those few among them that had the knowledge of God, might please themselves with it, and boast themselves of it; it would stand them in better stead than "thousands of gold and silver."—Henry.

CHAP. X. IDOLS CONTRASTED WITH THE ONE JEHOVAH.—Ver. 2. The people of Israel when in their own land had always been disposed to learn the idolatries and superstitions of their neighbours; the ten tribes were dispersed in heathen countries, and the Jews were about to be carried captive to Babylon, the very centre of idolatry. The Gentiles in general and the Chaldeans above all others, were addicted to astrology, and to regard omens; they were dismayed by comets, eclipses, and other unusual appearances of the heavenly bodies; and their determinations in the most important matters were often formed from such signs of the heavens, rather than from sound policy. This was the effect of the ignorance of God, of idolatrous regard to his creatures, and of vain endeavours to pry into futurity: and therefore the Lord's people must not imitate their customs. Whatever might seem to be portended by the signs of the heavens, they would be safe while trusting in God, and walking in the path of duty; and nothing could "truly" presage prosperity to them, in the way of disobedience. Ver. 3—5. The prophet exposes the folly and stupidity of idolaters, in the same manner that Isaiah had done. Ver. 6—8. The prophet here contrasts the glory of Israel's God with the impotency of senseless idols, in an act of solemn worship addressed to them, that by interweaving adorations with his instructions, the people might be led to concur in this holy service. None of the pretended deities, which some professed to worship by their images, could be equalled to JEHOVAH; they were either inanimate creatures, or the departed spirits of eminent men, or ideal characters, or devils. Nor could any of the wise legislators, philosophers, or rulers of the nation, vie with the Lord, the King of all nations. Who then would refuse to fear and worship him, whose infinite perfection, and absolute, universal, and everlasting sovereignty over all creatures, which are the works of his hands and wholly dependent on him; and whose power to save and to destroy, entitle him to this honour, and make it reasonable and advantageous to all rational creatures? Idolaters therefore must be altogether brutish and foolish; and the worship of a senseless block of wood, (however carved or ornamented, or whatever it was supposed to represent,) must lead to the most unworthy apprehensions of God, to the most gross and pernicious mistakes, and to all vain and abominable practices. Ver. 9, 10. Some think that Uphaz is the same as Ophir, but this is quite uncertain.—The contrast between the most expensive and most richly ornamented dead images and the living and true God, the everlasting King, whose wrath the nations could not abide, is very expressive and instructive.—Where but in the Scriptures do we meet with such sublime and rational thoughts concerning the great Creator and Lord of all.—Scott.

DEPRECATION AND IMPRECATION.—Ver. 24, 25. The prophet speaks not for himself only, but on the behalf of his people; "O Lord, correct me, but with judgment," in measure and with moderation, and in wisdom, no more than is necessary for the driving out of the foolishness that is bound up in our hearts: "not in thine anger;" how severe soever the correction be, let it come from thy love, and be designed for our good, and made to work for good; not to "bring us to nothing," but to bring us home to thyself. Let it not be according to the desert of our sins, but according to the designs of thy grace. Note, 1. We cannot pray in faith that we may never be corrected, while we are conscious to ourselves that we need it and deserve it, and know that as many as God loves, he chastens. 2. The great thing we should dread in affliction, is, the wrath of God. Say not, Lord, "do not correct me," but, Lord, do not correct me "in anger;" for that will infuse wormwood and gall into the affliction and misery; that will "bring us to nothing;" we may bear the smart of his rod, but we cannot bear the weight of his wrath. He imprecates the divine wrath against the oppressors and persecutors of Israel; ver. 25. "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not." This prayer does not come from a spirit of malice or revenge, nor is it intended to prescribe to God whom he should execute his judgments upon, or in what order: but, it is an appeal to his justice. "Lord, we are a provoking people; but are there not other nations that are more so? And shall we only be punished? We are thy children, and may expect a fatherly correction; but they are thine enemies, and against them we have reason to think thy indignation should be, not against us." This is God's usual method. The "cup put into the hands" of God's people is "full of mixtures," mixtures of mercy: but the "dregs of the cup" are reserved for "the wicked of the earth," let them "wring them out," Ps. lxxv. 8. It is a prediction of God's judgments upon all the impenitent enemies of his church and kingdom. If "judgment begin" thus "at the house of God," what shall be "the end" of those that "obey not his gospel?" 1 Pet. iv. 17.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. GOD'S COVENANT REPEATED AND ENFORCED.—Ver. 2—8. The orders are here given in the plural number, "Hear ye," &c.; to Jeremiah as one of many, who had been charged with the same message; and they refer to the national covenant made with Israel at mount Sinai. This was the charter of all Israel's privileges, as long as they were obedient according to the terms of it. But idolatry and apostacy from God, when general, and committed or connived at by public authority, forfeited the covenant. The 6 Then the LORD said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.

7 For [k]I earnestly protested unto your fathers, [l]in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice.

8 Yet they [m]obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the [†]imagination of their evil heart: [n]therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, which I commanded them to do: but they did them not.

9 And the LORD said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

10 They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: [r]the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, [s]I will bring evil upon them, [t]which they shall not be able to [‡]escape; and though [u]they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.

12 Then shall the cities of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem [x]go, and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their [§]trouble.

13 For [y]according to the number of thy cities[2] were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up [z]altars to that [‖]shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal.

14 Therefore [a]pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: [b]for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their *trouble.

15 [†]What hath my beloved to do in mine house, [•]seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many, and [c]the holy flesh is passed from thee? [‡]When thou doest evil, [g]then thou rejoicest.

16 The LORD called thy name, [h]A green olive-tree, fair, and of goodly fruit: [i]with the noise of a great tumult[3] he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken.

17 For the LORD of hosts, [k]that planted thee, hath [l]pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves, to provoke me to anger in offering incense unto Baal.

18 ¶ And [m]the LORD hath given me knowledge of it, and I know it: then thou shewedst me their doings.

CHAP. XII.

The prophet pleads with God concerning the prosperity of the wicked: appeals to him for his integrity; and prays that they, for whose sins the land was visited, might be selected for punishment, 1. God reproves his impatience, warns him to expect heavier trials, describes the wickedness of the people, and denounces sentence against them, 5. A prophecy of heavy judgments on the oppressors of the Jews, who would be restored to their own land; and of the calling of the Gentiles; the privileges of the obedient, and the destruction of the disobedient, 14.

[a]RIGHTEOUS art thou, O LORD, when I plead with thee; yet let me [*]talk with thee of thy judgments: [b]Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they happy that [c]deal very treacherously?

2 Thou [d]hast planted them; yea, they have taken root: they [†]grow; yea, they bring forth fruit: thou art [e]near in their mouth, and far from their reins.

3 But thou, O LORD, [f]knowest me: thou hast seen me, and tried mine heart [‡]toward thee: [g]pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for [h]the day of slaughter.

4 How [i]long shall the land mourn, and [k]the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? [l]the beasts are consumed, and the birds; because they said, [m]He shall not see our last end.

prophet was therefore sent to remind the people of the curses denounced in the law against the rebellious; and to show, that the continuance of the benefits covenanted to them, when they were delivered from Egyptian bondage, depended on their obedience. Whilst the Lord charged him with this message, and mentioned the good land given them, he answered and said "Amen," or, "So be it, O LORD;" as expressing his acquiescence in this reasonable requirement, and his hearty desire, that the people might return to obedience, and be continued in their privileges. He was then ordered to proclaim the covenant very publicly; to show the people how their fathers had broken it; to predict the speedy approach of the calamities threatened in it; and to charge the whole nation with having conspired together to forsake God, and give themselves up to idolatry. Some think that the prophet also reminded the people of the renewal of the covenant, lately made during the reign of Josiah. "The use of an iron furnace is to melt and purify metals, and it is an apt representation of sore afflictions." [Lowth.]—Scott.

SYMBOL OF THE "GREEN OLIVE"-TREE.—Ver. 16, 17. Their remembrance of them shall be no comfort to them under their troubles, and God's remembrance of them shall be no argument for their relief. 1. It is true, God had done "great things for them;" that people had been favourites above any people under the sun, they had been the darlings of heaven, God "had called" Israel's "name a green olive-tree," and had made them so, for he miscalls nothing; he had "planted" them, had formed them into a people, with all the advantages they could have to make them a fruitful and flourishing people, so good was their law, and so good was their land. One would think no other than that a people so planted, so watered, so cultivated, should be, as the "olive-tree" is, "ever green," in respect both of piety and prosperity, Ps. liii. 8. God called them "fair," and of "goodly fruit;" both "good for food," and "pleasant to the eye;" both amiable and serviceable to God and man, for with the greenness and fatness of the olive both are honoured, Judg. ix. 9. 2. It is as true, that they have done "evil things against God;" he had planted them a green olive, a good olive, but they were degenerated into a wild olive, Rom. xi. 17. Both "the house of Israel" and "the house of Judah," had "done evil," had "provoked God to anger in burning incense unto Baal," setting up other mediators between them and the supreme God beside the promised Messiah; nay, setting up other gods in competition with the true and living God, for they had gods many, as well as lords many. 3. When they have conducted themselves so ill, they can expect no other than that, notwithstanding what good he has "done to them," and "designed for them," he should "now bring upon them the evil he has pronounced against them." He that made them will not save them. He that planted this "green olive-tree," and expected fruit from it, finding it barren and grown wild, has "kindled fire upon it," to burn it as it stands; for, being "without fruit," it is "twice dead, plucked up by the roots," Jude 12, it is "cut down, and cast into the fire," the fittest place for trees that cumber the ground, Matt. iii. 10. The "branches of it," the "high and lofty boughs," (so the word signifies,) are "broken," are "broken down," both princes and priests cut off. And thus it proves, that the evil done against God, to "provoke him to anger," is really done "against themselves," they "wrong their own souls;" God is out of their reach, but they ruin themselves. See chap. vii. 19. Note, Every sin against God is a sin against ourselves, and so it will be found sooner or later.—Henry.

CONSPIRACY AGAINST JEREMIAH.—Ver. 18—23. Whilst the prophet was earnestly seeking the good of his people, a conspiracy was formed against his life. His brethren, the priests of his own city Anathoth, were the ringleaders in this combination. They could not endure his faithful warnings and reproofs: they hated the man and his communications, and were determined either to silence or to slay him, that he and his predictions might be forgotten together. But before they had brought their matters to bear, the Lord discovered their devices to his prophet, and probably directed him how to frustrate them. Upon this he speaks as one in amazement; he had done nothing to merit this treatment from them; and had never suspected them, any more than the lamb, or ox, suspects danger when led to the slaughter. He then appeals for his innocence to God, who knoweth what passes in the inmost recesses of the heart, and refers his cause to him, and he was in consequence instructed to denounce vengeance on them, root and branch; so that no remnant should be left of them in the approaching season of visitation.—The words rendered "Let me see thy vengeance on them," are literally, "I shall see thy vengeance on them." "I foresee it and predict it, though I deplore it." This is one out of many instances, in which, I apprehend, an undue regard to the Septuagint has induced our venerable translators needlessly to introduce the sacred writers as uttering imprecations, rather than predictions, against their persecutors. It cannot be denied, that their predictions sometimes must be rendered as imprecations; but this should not be done, when the words may literally be otherwise translated.—Scott.

CHAP. XII JEREMIAH'S APPEAL TO GOD.—Ver. 1—4. The prophet's discomposure on account of the conspiracy formed against him, led him into a perplexity about the prosperity of the ringleaders in iniquity, among whom he probably numbered the men of Anathoth to be the principal. He also thought that judgments inflicted on them might prevent the ruin of the nation; and he resolved to pour out his heart before God on this subject. He allowed that the Lord was righteous in his most mysterious judgments; yet he entreated him to show the reasons of his conduct, and why he suffered 7 ¶ [t]have forsaken mine house, I have left mine heritage; [u]I have given *the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies.

8 Mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest; it [†]crieth out against me: therefore have I hated it.

9 Mine heritage is unto me as a [‡]speckled bird;[2] the birds round about are against her; come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, [§]come to devour.

10 Many [a]pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they [c]have trodden my portion under foot, they have made my [l]pleasant portion a desolate wilderness.

11 They have made it desolate, and being desolate, it mourneth unto me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man [e]layeth it to heart.

12 The spoilers are come upon all high places through the wilderness:[3] for [g]the sword of the LORD shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land: no flesh shall have peace.

13 They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns: they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit; and they shall be ashamed of your revenues, because of the fierce anger of the LORD.

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD [i]against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, [n]I will pluck them out of their land, [o]and pluck out the house of Judah from among them.

15 And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out, I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

16 And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The LORD liveth; ([r]as they taught my people to swear by Baal;) then shall they be [s]built in the midst of my people.

17 But [t]if they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the LORD.[4]

4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.

5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates,[1] as the LORD commanded me.

6 And it came to pass after many days, that the LORD said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there.

7 Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it; and, behold, the girdle was marred, [e]it was profitable for nothing.

8 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Thus saith the LORD, After this manner will I mar [g]the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem.

10 This evil people, which [l]refuse to hear my words, [k]which walk in the *imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing.

11 For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have [m]I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Judah, saith the LORD; that they might be unto me for a people, and [n]for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: [o]but they would not hear.

12 ¶ Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [p]Every bottle shall be filled with wine; and they shall say unto thee, Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?

13 Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, [q]I will fill all the inhabitants of this land,[2] even the kings that sit upon David's throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness.

14 And [r]I will dash them one [†]against another, [s]even the fathers and the sons together, saith the LORD: [t]I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, [‡]but destroy them.

15 ¶ Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the LORD hath spoken.

such treacherous men, as cloaked their inward iniquitous devices with a profession of piety, to prosper in their families, circumstances, and undertakings. He could with confidence appeal to the heart-searching God, that he acted uprightly; and that he was hated and persecuted for his sake; and he therefore prayed that these principal transgressors might be singled out for punishment, as sheep are for the slaughter; that a check being thus given to the growth of wickedness, and a sacrifice as it were made to divine justice, the drought under which the land laboured might be terminated.—Scott.

NEED OF COURAGE FOR GREATER TRIALS. Ver. 5. "If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee," and run thee quite out of breath, then "how wilt thou contend with horses?" If the injuries done him by the men of Anathoth made such an impression upon him, what would he do when the princes and chief priests at Jerusalem should set upon him with their power, as they did afterward, chap. xx. 2; xxxii. 2. If he was so soon tired "in a land of peace," where there was little noise or peril, "what would he do in the swellings of Jordan," when that overflows all its banks, and frightens even lions out of their thickets? chap. xlix. 19. Note, 1. While we are in this world, we must expect troubles and difficulties. Our life is a race, a warfare; we are in danger of being "run down." 2. God's usual method being to begin with lesser trials, it is our wisdom to expect greater than any we have yet met with. We may be called out to "contend with horsemen," and the sons of Anak may perhaps be reserved for the last encounter. 3. It highly concerns us to prepare for such trials, and to consider what we should do in them. How shall we preserve our integrity and peace, when we come to the "swellings of Jordan?" 4. In order to our preparation for further and greater trials, we are concerned to approve ourselves well in present lesser trials, to keep up our spirits, keep hold of the promise, keep in our way, with our eye upon the prize, so run that we may obtain it.—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. SYMBOL OF THE "GIRDLE."—Ver. 1—11. It is probable that the girdle worn by the prophet was such as were used as ornaments by the priests at that time. He was directed to put it on without washing, "to represent the Jews in their corrupt state of nature, when they had nothing to recommend them to grace and favour." [Lowth.] Perhaps the prophet was to wear the girdle for a considerable time without washing, when it would cease to be ornamental, and even become offensive, as an emblem of the corrupt state of Israel, the chosen people of God.—Many interpreters conclude that the subsequent transaction was only a vision, but it is related as a fact; and it is not advisable, without evident necessity, to sanction such a mode of interpretation, in opposition to the obvious meaning of Scripture. Nay, the self-denying, laborious, implicit obedience of the prophet, in taking all these journeys of some hundreds of miles each, was aptly suited to render his sign impressive; to shame the disobedience of the people, and to show the excessive hardships to which they would be exposed by the approaching captivity. It is probable that the people were acquainted with this sign, some time before it was expounded, and they were left to make their own observations on it; at length God instructed his servant to explain it to them. He had chosen Israel to be his covenanted people, and brought them near unto him by every external privilege, that they might be an honour and praise unto him; "that they might have the honour of being called by my name; and that I might be glorified by their showing forth my truth and praises to the world." [Lowth.] And this was the case whilst they adhered to his worship, and were obedient and prosperous. But they gloried in their peculiar distinctions, and were very proud of them, and at the same time turned aside to idolatry and iniquity. Thus they became a scandal instead of an honour to the Lord, losing their comeliness, and becoming polluted like the unwashen girdle; therefore he purposed to punish them by the Chaldeans, and to carry the remnant of them captive to Babylon. Then their great pride would be marred: their temple would be destroyed, and its worship caused to cease; their city would be desolated, their prosperity ruined, their numbers reduced; and a poor despised enslaved company alone would be left to go captives to Babylon, and there to be worn out by oppressions, till they became like the decayed girdle. But though this would mar their great pride, it was not intended to ruin the nation, but to prepare them for future mercies.

GOD'S ANGER—THE FULL WINE-SKIN.—Ver. 12—14. The prophet was next ordered, in the name of the Lord, to assure the people that "every bottle should be filled with wine." This seems to have been a proverbial expression, and applied in different ways; and the Lord forewarned him that they would reply in a mixture of contempt and indignation, "Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?" "The hearers shall take this prophecy in great scorn, and say, What wonders are these that thou tellest us? As if we knew not that the use of bottles is to be filled with wine! tell these things to children that understand nothing." [Bp. Hall.] Upon this he was ordered to explain his meaning, and to show them, that as the bottle was fitted to hold the wine, so their sins had made them vessels of wrath fitted for the judgments of God; and that they should all be filled with them till they were intoxicated, and made furious, to accomplish each other's destruction, like earthen bottles filled with wine, and dashed against each other.

[l] The ministers of the Lord ought seriously to reflect upon what is here said of the crime and punishment of those false prophets who promised peace to the Jews at the very time their ruin was approaching; that it may be a warning to them never to flatter sinners, nor lull them into security, but to speak always with zeal and sincerity what God has commanded. And the people ought likewise to learn from hence to hearken diligently to those who declare the truth to them sincerely and without flattery.—OSTERVALD.

5 Yea, the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass.

6 And the wild asses did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons; their eyes did fail, because there was no grass.

7 ¶ O LORD, [n]though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake: [p]for our backslidings are many; we have sinned against thee.

8 O [q]the hope of Israel, the [r]Saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land,[s] and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night?

9 Why shouldest thou be as a man astonied, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O LORD, [x]art in the midst of us, and [‡]we are called by thy name; [y]leave us not.

10 ¶ Thus saith the LORD unto this people, Thus have they loved to wander, they have not refrained their feet; therefore [b]the LORD doth not accept them: [c]he will now remember their iniquity, and visit their sins.

11 Then said the LORD unto me, [d]Pray not for this people for their good.

12 When they fast, I will not hear their cry; and when they offer burnt-offering and an oblation, I will not accept them: [e]but I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence.

13 ¶ Then said I, Ah, Lord GOD! behold, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine; but I will give you [f]assured peace in this place.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, [i]The prophets prophesy lies in my name: [k]I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name,[s] and I sent them not, yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land; By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed.

16 And [n]the people to whom they prophesy shall [o]be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem, because of the famine and the sword: and they shall have none to bury them; them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters: [p]for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

17 ¶ Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them, Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: for the virgin-daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow.

confessing their sins, acknowledging his justice, humbling themselves in repentance, seeking forgiveness, and returning to his worship and service; and to do this without delay, that the threatened judgments might, if possible, be averted. Otherwise the Lord would speedily extinguish all their prosperity, and leave them in darkness and despondency; then they would be in distress, like that of men wandering in the dark upon the mountains, liable every moment to fall down precipices, or to be devoured by wild beasts. Or they would be carried from "the valley of vision" into countries destitute of the light of the Revelation, and enveloped in all the darkness of idolatry and wickedness; there they would be left to stumble and fall without remedy; all their hopes would issue in disappointment and deeper distress, which would be introductory to the final misery and despair of those who persisted in impenitence.—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. NATIONAL DISTRESS.—Ver. 2—6. Some render this passage, in the future, as a prediction; but the prophet seems to speak of scenes which he himself witnessed. He has here given us a melancholy description of this calamity and its effects. Through the want of rain, and the consequent failure of the crops, the whole land of Judah mourned in deep distress: they who went in and out through the gates of the cities languished for want of food; or the gates were unfrequented by those who had been used to bring in provisions. The people neglected their persons, and lay on the ground, squalid, meagre, and dejected, through want and misery: and the cry of Jerusalem went up; either their cries of distress, or their supplications for deliverance; for it is probable that a day of fasting and humiliation was observed on this occasion. The very nobles were distressed for want of water, and sent either their own children, (as not caring to trust any others in this emergency,) or their servants, to fetch it from the wells or cisterns, but none could be had; and they returned with empty vessels, ashamed, and covering their heads as mourners or penitents. The husbandman either could not plow the parched ground, or he cultivated it in vain; so that they were ashamed of their confidence in their industry and knowledge of agriculture, and found themselves unable to support their families, or sustain their own lives. The very beasts shared the distress: the hinds forsook their young, (as is usual with some animals in such circumstances,) not having any milk for them, through want of food for themselves; and the wild asses gasped for breath, and looked like dragons or large serpents, which in hot and dry seasons greedily inhale the cooling air on the tops of mountains; and their eyes grew dim through heat, hunger, and thirst.—Scott.

SOLEMN APPEAL TO GOD.—Ver. 8. "Thou art the hope of Israel." God has encouraged his people to hope in him: in calling himself so often the "God of Israel," the "Rock of Israel," and the "Holy One of Israel," he has made himself the "Hope of Israel." He has given Israel his word to hope in, and caused them to hope in it; and there are those yet in Israel that make God alone "their Hope," and expect he will be "their Saviour in time of trouble," and they look not for salvation in any other; "Thou hast many a time been such in the time of their extremity." Note, Since God is his people's all-sufficient Saviour, they ought to hope in him in their greatest straits; and since he is their only Saviour, they ought to hope in him alone. They plead likewise, "'Thou art in the midst of us,' we have the special tokens of thy presence with us, thy temple, thy ark, thy oracles, and 'we are called by thy name,' the 'Israel of God;' and therefore we have reason to hope thou wilt not leave us; 'we are thine, save us.' Thy name is called upon us, and therefore what evils we are under reflect dishonour upon thee, as if thou wast not able to relieve thine own." The prophet had often told the people, that their profession of religion would not protect them from the judgments of God: yet here he pleads it with God, as Moses, Exod. xxxii. 11. Even this may go far as to temporal punishments with a God of mercy.

EARNEST SUPPLICATION.—Ver. 21. The prophet's petition is, "'Do not abhor us; though thou afflict us, 'do not abhor us;' though thy hand be turned 'against' us, let not thy heart be so, nor let 'thy mind' be 'alienated' from us." They own God might justly "abhor" them, they had rendered themselves "odious" in his eyes; yet when they pray, "Do not abhor us," they mean, "Receive us into favour again. 'Let not thy soul loathe Zion,' ver 19. Let not our incense be our abomination." They appeal, 1. To the honour of God, the honour of "his scriptures," by which he has "made himself known;" his "word," which he has "magnified above all his name;" "'Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake,' that name of thine by which we are called, and which we call upon." The honour of "his sanctuary" is pleaded; "Lord, do not abhor us, for that will 'disgrace the throne of thy glory,'" (the temple, which is called "a glorious high throne from the beginning," chap. xvii. 12,) let not that which has been the "joy of the whole earth" be made a "hissing" and an "astonishment;" we deserve to have "disgrace" put upon us, but let it not be so as to reflect upon thyself; let not the desolations of the temple give occasion to the heathen to reproach him that used to be worshipped there, as if he could not, or would not, protect it, or as if the gods of the Chaldeans had been too hard for him. Note, Good men lay the credit of religion, and its profession in the world, nearer their hearts than any private interest or concern of their own; and those are powerful pleas in prayer, which are fetched from thence, and great supports to faith. We may be sure that God will not "disgrace the throne of his glory" on earth; nor will he eclipse the glory of his throne by one providence, without soon making it shine forth,

The utter rejection and manifold judgments of the Jews, 1. Jeremiah complaining, 10, receiveth a gracious promise, 19.

THEN said the LORD unto me, Though [b]Moses and Samuel [c]stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people: [c]cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth.

2 And it shall come to pass, if they say unto thee, Whither shall we go forth? then thou shalt tell them, Thus saith the LORD; Such as are for death, to death; and such as are for the sword, to the sword; and such as are for the famine, to the famine; and such as are for the captivity, to the captivity.

3 And I will appoint over them four [*]kinds, saith the LORD: the sword to slay, and the dogs to tear, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy.

4 And I will [†]cause them to be [h]removed into all kingdoms of the earth,[1] [i]because of Manasseh the son of Hezekiah king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem.

5 For who shall have pity upon thee, O Jerusalem? or who shall bemoan thee? or who shall go aside to ask [‡]how thou doest?

6 Thou hast [l]forsaken me, saith the LORD, thou art gone backward: therefore will I [n]stretch out my hand against thee, and destroy thee; I am weary with repenting.

7 And I will fan them [2]with a fan in the gates of the land; [q]I will bereave them of [s]children, I will destroy my people, [r]since they return not from their ways.

8 Their [s]widows are increased to me above the sand of the seas: I have brought upon them, against [t]the mother of the young men, [t]a spoiler at noon-day: I have caused him to fall upon it suddenly, and terrors upon the city.

9 She [u]that hath born seven languisheth; she hath given up the ghost; [x]her sun is gone down while it was yet day; she hath been ashamed and confounded: [y]and the residue of them will I deliver to the sword before their enemies, saith the LORD.

10 ¶ Woe is me, my mother, that thou hast born me a man of strife and a man of contention to the whole earth! I have neither lent on usury,[3] nor men have lent to me on usury; yet every one of them doth curse me.

11 The LORD said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant; [c]verily I will [*]cause the enemy to entreat thee well in the time of evil, and in the time of affliction.

12 Shall [f]iron break the northern iron[4] and the steel?

13 Thy substance and [g]thy treasures will I give to the spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders.

14 And I will make thee to [h]pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not: for [i]a fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you.

15 ¶ O LORD, [k]thou knowest: [l]remember me, and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors; [m]take me not away in thy long-suffering: [n]know that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke.

16 Thy words were found, and [o]I did eat them; and thy word was unto me [p]the joy and rejoicing of mine heart: for [†]I am called by thy name, O LORD God of hosts.

17 I [q]sat not in the assembly of the mockers, nor rejoiced; [r]I sat alone, because of thy hand: [s]for thou hast filled me with indignation.

18 Why is [t]my pain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which refuseth to be healed? wilt thou be altogether unto me [u]as a liar, [x]and as waters that [‡]fail?[5]

19 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD, [y]If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and [z]thou shalt stand before me: and [a]if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be [b]as my mouth: [c]let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them.

20 And [d]I will make thee unto this people a fenced brasen wall; and they shall fight against thee, [e]but they shall not prevail against thee: for I am with thee and more brightly than before, by another. God will be no loser in his honour at the long run. 2. To the promise of God; of this they are humbly bold to put him in mind; "Remember" thy covenant "with us," and "break not" that "covenant." Not that they had any distrust of his fidelity, or that they thought he needed be put in mind of his promise to them, but what he had said he would plead with himself, they take the liberty to plead with him; "Then will I remember my covenant," Lev. xxvi. 42.—Henry.

CHAP. XV. GOD'S PURPOSE UNCHANGEABLE.—Ver. 1. "Though Moses and Samuel 'stood before me,' by prayer or sacrifice to reconcile me to them, yet I could not be prevailed with to admit them into favour." Moses and Samuel were two as great favourites of heaven, as ever were the blessings of this earth, and were particularly famed for the success of their mediation between God and his offending people; many a time they had been destroyed, if Moses had not stood before him in the breach; and to Samuel's prayers they owed their lives, 1 Sam. xii. 19; yet even their intercessions should not prevail, no, not though they were now in a state of perfection, much less Jeremiah's, who was now "subject to like passions" as others. The putting of this as a case, "Though they should stand before me," supposes that they do not, and is an intimation that saints in heaven are not intercessors for saints on earth. It is the prerogative of the Eternal Word to be the only Mediator in the other world, whatever Moses and Samuel and others were in this.—Henry.

JEREMIAH'S WAIL.—Ver. 10. The prophet had rendered himself very obnoxious by his awful predictions; and he could not prevail for a mitigation of the sentence denounced against his people: nay, he was sent with still severer messages of vengeance. This he knew would expose him to their more violent resentment; and therefore he lamented that his mother ever bare him, to be a man of strife and contention to the whole land. For he was doomed to spend his life in contending against the sins of the people, and the delusions of the false prophets; and to be treated as a troublesome, quarrelsome person for so doing. He had neither borrowed nor lent money in an usurious manner: he meddled not with secular concerns; he gave no umbrage, and did no injury in those matters which are the common grounds of contention; and yet he was more generally hated and cursed, than any fraudulent debtor or oppressing creditor.—His trials were doubtless great: yet there was much infirmity in these passionate wishes and complaints [illegible] an object of the common hatred; every body takes occasion to quarrel with [illegible] I speak such truths as they do not care to hear."—Scott.

[illegible] Words.—Ver. 16. "'Thy words were found,' found 'by me;'" (he [illegible] diligently studied the law, and found that in it which was re-viving to him. If we seek we shall find;) "found 'for me;'" (the words which he was to deliver to others, were laid ready to his hand, were brought to him by inspiration;) "'and I did' not only taste them, but 'eat' them, received them entirely, conversed with them intimately; they were welcome to me, as food to one that is hungry; I entertained them, digested them, turned them in succum et sanguinem—into blood and spirits, and was myself delivered into the mould of those truths which I was to deliver to others." The prophet was bid to "eat the roll," Ezek. ii. 8, Rev. x. 9. "I did eat it," that is, as it follows, it was "to me the joy and rejoicing of my heart," nothing could be more agreeable. Understand it, 1. Of the message itself which he was to deliver. Though he was to foretell the ruin of his country, which was dear to him, and in the ruin of which he could not but have a deep share, yet all natural affections were swallowed up in zeal for God's glory. Or, 2. Of the commission he received to deliver this message. Though the work he was called to was not attended with any secular advantages, but, on the contrary, exposed him to contempt and persecution, yet, because it put him in a way to serve God, and do good, he took pleasure in it, was glad to be so employed, and it was his "meat and drink to do the will of him that sent him," John iv. 13.—Henry.

DIVINE ENCOURAGEMENT.—Ver. 19—21. The prophet was out of temper, and heartless about his work; and in a frame of mind which may best be understood by those who have been tried a little in the same way. But the Lord called him to repent of his impatience, and to return to his work. In this case he would again employ and honour him; he would bring him out of his difficulties, and cause him to stand with acceptance before him. And if he learned to distinguish betwixt the precious and the vile, especially in respect of the characters of the people; that he might address them severally for reproof, conviction, instruction, or consolation: then the Lord would employ him as his mouth, to declare his will, and certainly would take care of him. But he must go on steadily with his work, using every means to bring the people to return to him, as their prophet, and to obey the Lord's word by him; and in case they would not, to leave the matter with Him; but not to go down at all upon their ground, not to vary from his instructions, not to accommodate in the least to their wishes, nor to give the least countenance or encouragement to them in their sins, either by his doctrine or example. If he attended to these things, he might be assured the Lord would perform his promises before made to him, and deliver him from the most powerful and malicious of his enemies.—Scott.

THE [a]word of the LORD came also unto me, saying,

2 Thou shalt [b]not take thee a wife,[1] neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place.

3 For thus saith the LORD concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land;

4 They shall [c]die of grievous deaths; [d]they shall not be lamented, [e]neither shall they be buried; but they shall be [f]as dung upon the face of the earth: and they shall be [g]consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their carcases shall be [h]meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

5 For thus saith the LORD; [i]Enter not into the house of [*]mourning, neither go to lament nor bemoan them: for [k]I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the LORD, even loving-kindness and mercies.

6 Both [l]the great and the small shall die in this land: [m]they shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them,[2] [n]nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them:

7 Neither shall men [†]tear [3]themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the [o]cup of consolation to drink for their father, or for their mother.

8 Thou shalt not also go into [p]the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink.

9 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, [q]I will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride.

10 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, [r]Wherefore hath the LORD pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity? or what is our sin that we have committed against the LORD our God?

11 Then shalt thou say unto them, [s]Because your fathers have forsaken me, saith the LORD, and have [t]walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law:

12 And ye have done worse than your fathers; (for, behold, ye walk every one after the [‡]imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me;)

13 Therefore [y]will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods [4]day and night, where I will not shew you favour.

14 ¶ Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that it shall no more be said, The LORD liveth, [b]that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

15 But, the LORD liveth, [c]that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.

16 ¶ Behold, I will send for many fishers,[5] saith the LORD, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks.

17 For [s]mine eyes are upon all their ways: they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes.

18 And [h]first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double: because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcases of their detestable and abominable things.

19 O LORD, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, [m]the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, [n]Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.

20 Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods?

21 Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is [§]The LORD.

blessing under the law, (Deut. xxviii. 4;) but it ceased to be so, in such difficult times as were coming on the Jewish nation." [Lowth.] The prophet was therefore forbidden to marry, and required to make the prohibition known, in order the more forcibly to impress the minds of the people with the apprehension of the reality and near approach of the tremendous judgments which he had predicted. The time was at hand when the most endeared relations would be an additional cause of anguish and misery; and to manifest his assured belief of this, the prophet was to remain unmarried, that he might be less encumbered, and more prepared for days of distress. The best comment on these verses may be found in any authentic narrative of what takes place, when dire pestilence baffles all efforts to restrain it, in a city or district. So far from the customary funeral rites being attended to; it often happens, that houses are deserted, where the dead, nay, dying, remain; who are not found for some time, and then in circumstances too horrid to be described. Several of these customary tokens of mourning were prohibited by the law.—Scott.

REFUGE IN GOD.—Ver. 19—21. 1. The people shall be brought to a knowledge that their God only is "God indeed," for he is a "God in need;" my Strength, to support and comfort me, my Fortress, to protect and shelter me, and my Refuge, to whom I may flee "in the day of affliction." Note, need drives many to God, who had set themselves at a distance from him. Those that slighted him in the day of their prosperity, will be glad to flee to him in the day of their affliction. 2. They shall be quickened to return to him by the conversion of the Gentiles; "the Gentiles shall come to thee from the ends of the earth;" and therefore shall not we come? Or, the Jews who had by their idolatries made themselves as Gentiles, (so I rather understand it,) shall "come to thee" by repentance and reformation, shall return to their duty and allegiance, even "from the ends of the earth," from all the countries whither they were driven. 3. They shall acknowledge the folly of their ancestors, which it becomes them to do, when they were smarting for the sins of their ancestors; "'Surely our fathers have inherited,' not the satisfaction they promised themselves and their children, but 'lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit;' we are now sensible that our fathers were cheated in their idolatrous worship, it did not prove what it promised, and therefore, what have we to do any more with it?" Note, It were well if the disappointment which some have met with in the service of sin, and the pernicious consequences of it to them, might prevail to deter others from treading in their steps. 4. They shall reason themselves out of their idolatry; and that reformation is likely to be sincere and durable, which results from a rational conviction of the gross absurdity there is in sin. They shall argue thus with themselves, (and it is well argued,) "Should a man" be such a fool, so perfectly void of the reason of a man, as to "make gods to himself," the creatures of his own fancy, the work of his own hands, when they are really "no gods?" ver. 20. Can a man be so besotted, so perfectly lost to human understanding, as to expect any divine blessing or favour from that which pretends to no divinity but what it first received from him? 5. They shall herein give honour to God, and make it to appear that they know both his hand in his providence, and his name in his word, and that they are brought to know his name, by what they are made to know of his hand, ver. 21. This once, now at length, they shall be made to know that which they would not be brought to know by all the pains the prophets took with them. Note, So stupid are we, that nothing less than the mighty hand of divine grace, known experimentally, can make us know rightly the name of God as it is revealed to us.—Henry.

CHAP. XVII. VANITY OF TRUST IN MAN—HAPPINESS OF TRUST IN GOD.—Ver. 5—8. A dreadful curse is therefore here pronounced against every one who trusteth in man. To expect safety, prosperity, or happiness from any man or number of men; to rely on their power, wealth, wisdom, valour, favour, and fidelity; and thus to neglect the promises, precepts, and ordinances of God, and to bestow more pains to obtain man's patronage and protection, than the Divine favour; as if a prince could render him happy who has God for his enemy; by these things, and such as these, we "make flesh our arm;" and put a poor, frail, dying, sinful creature, in the place of our almighty and everlasting protector and helper. In so doing "the heart departeth from the Lord," and renounces its reliance on him. And as trusting in other men idolizes them; so reliance on our own capacity, knowledge, wisdom, strength, or righteousness, idolizes ourselves; and when this is habitual, it subjects a man to this curse. A person of this character resembles the heath, a sorry, sapless, worthless shrub, which grows in the barren desert, and withers for want of moisture; and whilst other plants, in more fertile soils, flourish by seasonable showers, this still continues the same, as doomed to grow in its native heartless soil. Thus he who trusts in man can never share the prosperity of God's people: he must remain destitute of divine grace, unfruitful, unholy, and contemptible, frustrated of all his expectations, liable to be deprived of all comfort, exposed to all misery, and excluded from the presence and favour of God, to inhabit the land where sin and sorrow dwell for ever.—But he who trusts in the Lord, and expects every blessing from his mercy, grace, and providence, according to his word, is a happy man: he resembles a tree planted in a fertile soil on the bank of a river, which is not affected by heat or drought; but is covered with verdant leaves, and continues to bear fruit in the most unfavourable seasons. His profession and prosperity are permanent: he remains safe in 4 And thou, even *thyself, shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not: [l]for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

5 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, [m]Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and [o]whose heart departeth from the LORD:

6 For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land,[1] and not inhabited.

7 [p]Blessed is the man that trusteth in the LORD, and whose hope the LORD is:

8 For [q]he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of [†]drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit.

13 O LORD, [e]the hope of Israel, [f]all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth,[3] because they have [i]forsaken the LORD, the fountain of living waters.

14 [k]Heal me, O LORD, and I shall be healed; [l]save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art my praise.

15 ¶ Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the LORD? let it come now.

16 As for me, I have not hastened from being a pastor [§]to follow thee: neither have I desired the woeful day; thou knowest: [q]that which came out of my lips was right before thee.

17 Be not a terror unto me: [s]thou art my hope in the day of evil.

18 Let [t]them be confounded that persecute me, [u]but let not me be confounded; let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed: bring upon them [x]the day of evil, and [‖]destroy them with double destruction.

WICKEDNESS OF THE HUMAN HEART.—Ver. 9. "The heart," the conscience of man, in his corrupt and fallen state, is "deceitful above all things;" it is subtle and false, it is apt to supplant; so the word properly signifies, it is that from which Jacob had his name, a supplanter. It calls evil good, and good evil; puts false colours upon things, and cries peace to those to whom peace does not belong. When men say in their hearts, suffer their hearts to whisper to them, that either there is no God, or he does not see, or he will not require, or they shall have peace, though they go on; in these, and a thousand similar suggestions, the heart is deceitful; it cheats men into their own ruin; and this will be the aggravation of it, that they are self-deceivers, self-destroyers. Herein the heart is "desperately wicked;" it is deadly, it is desperate. The case is bad indeed, and in a manner deplorable, and past relief, if the conscience, which should rectify the errors of the other faculties, is itself a mother of falsehood, and a ringleader in the delusion. What will become of a man if that in him which should be the "candle of the Lord," give a false light, if God's deputy in the soul, that is intrusted to support his interests, betrays them? Such is the deceitfulness of the heart, that we may truly say, "Who can know it?" Who can describe how bad the heart is? We cannot know our own hearts, not what they will do in an hour of temptation, (Hezekiah did not, Peter did not,) not what corrupt dispositions there are in them, nor in how many things they have turned aside: who can understand his errors? Much less can we know the hearts of others, or have any dependence upon them. But, whatever wickedness there is in the heart, God sees it, and knows it, is perfectly acquainted with it, and apprized of it; "I the Lord search the heart."

GOD'S THRONE.—Ver. 12. "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary:" the temple at Jerusalem, where God manifested his special presence, where the lively oracles were lodged, where the people paid their homage to their Sovereign, and whither they fled for refuge in distress, was the "place of their sanctuary." That was a "glorious high throne;" it was a throne of holiness, that made it truly glorious; it was God's throne, that made it truly high. Jerusalem is called "the city of the great King," not only Israel's King, but the King of the whole earth, so that it might justly be deemed the metropolis, or royal city of the world. It was "from the beginning" so, from the first projecting of it by David, and building of it by Solomon, 2 Chron. ii. 9. It was the honour of Israel, that God set up such a glorious throne among them. "As the glorious and high throne," that is, heaven, "is the place of our sanctuary;" so some read it. Note, All good men have a high value and veneration for the ordinances of God, and reckon the "place of the sanctuary a glorious high throne."—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. EMBLEM OF THE POTTER AND HIS WORK.—Ver. 1—4. The prophet is here sent to the "potter's house," (he knew where to find it,) not to preach a sermon, as before to the gates of Jerusalem, but to prepare a sermon, or rather to receive it ready prepared. Those needed not to study their sermons, that had them, as he had this, by immediate inspiration. "Go to 'the potter's house,' and observe how he manages his work, and there 'I will cause thee,' by silent whispers, to 'hear my words.' There thou shalt receive a message, to be delivered to the people." Note, Those that would know God's mind, must observe his appointments, and attend there where they may "hear his words." The prophet was never "disobedient to the heavenly vision," and therefore went to the potter's house, ver. 3, and took notice how he "wrought his work upon the wheels," just as he pleased, with a great deal of ease, and in a little time. And, ver. 4, when a lump of clay, that he designed to form into one shape, either proved too stiff, or had a stone in it, or some way or other came to be "marred in his hand," he presently turned it into another shape; if it will not serve for a vessel of honour, it will serve for a vessel of dishonour, just as "seems good to the potter." It is probable that Jeremiah knew well enough how the potter wrought his work, and how easily he threw it into what form he pleased; but he must go and observe it now, that, having the idea of it fresh in his mind, he might the more readily and distinctly apprehend that truth which God designed thereby to represent to him, and might the more intelligently explain it to the people. God "used similitudes by his servants the prophets," Hos. xii. 10, and it was requisite that they should themselves understand the similitudes they used. Ministers will make a good use of their converse with the business and affairs of this life, if they learn thereby to speak more plainly and familiarly to people about the things of God, and to expound Scripture comparisons. For they ought to make all their knowledge, some way or other, serviceable to their profession. Now let us see what the message is, which Jeremiah receives, and is entrusted with the delivery of, at the potter's house. While he looks carefully upon the potter's work, God darts into his mind these two great truths, which he must preach to "the house of Israel." That God has both an incontestible authority, and an irresistible ability, to form and fashion kingdoms and nations as he pleases, so as to serve his own purposes; "'Cannot I do with you as this potter, saith the Lord,' ver. 6. Have not I as absolute a power over you in respect both of might and of right?" Nay, God has a clearer title to a dominion [t] made it again another vessel, [c]as seemed good to the potter to make it.

5 Then the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

6 O house of Israel, [d]cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the LORD. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel.

7 At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, [e]to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it;

8 If [f]that nation, against whom I have pronounced,[3] turn from their evil, [g]I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them.

9 And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, [h]to build and to plant it;

10 If it [i]do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, [k]then I will repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them.

11 Now therefore go to, speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you: [m]return ye now every one from his evil way, and make your ways and your doings good.

12 And they said, There is no hope: but [p]we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart.

13 Therefore thus saith the LORD; [q]Ask ye now among the heathen, [r]who hath heard such things? the virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing.

14 Will a man leave [s]the snow of Lebanon[4] which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?

15 Because [u]my people hath forgotten me, they have burned incense to vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from [x]the ancient paths, to walk in paths, in a way not cast up;

16 To make their land [b]desolate, and a perpetual hissing: every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head.

17 I will [d]scatter them as with an east wind[5] before the enemy; I will [e]shew them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity.

18 ¶ Then said they, [f]Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; [g]for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet: [h]come, and let us smite him [l]with the tongue, [i]and let us not give heed to any of his words.

19 Give heed to me, O LORD, and hearken to the voice of them [m]that contend with me.

20 Shall [n]evil be recompensed for good? for they have digged a pit for my soul.[6] [o]Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them.

21 Therefore [p]deliver up their children to the famine, and *pour out their blood by the force of the sword; [q]and let their wives be bereaved of their children, and be widows; and let their men be put to death; [r]let their young men be slain by the sword in battle.

22 Let a cry be heard from their houses, when thou shalt bring a troop suddenly upon them; [t]for they have digged a pit to take me, and hid snares for my feet.

23 Yet, LORD, [x]thou knowest all their counsel against me [†]to slay me: [y]forgive not their iniquity, neither blot out their sin from thy sight, but let them be overthrown before thee; deal thus with them [z]in the time of thine anger.

CHAP. XIX.

Under the type of breaking a potter's vessel, is foreshewed the desolation of the Jews for their sins.

THUS saith the LORD, [a]Go and get a potter's earthen bottle,[1] and take of the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests;

2 And go forth unto [c]the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the *east gate, [d]and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee:

3 And say, [e]Hear ye the word of the LORD, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle.[2]

4 Because [g]they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and [i]have burned incense in it unto other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah,[3] and [k]have filled this place with the blood of innocents;

5 They have built also the high places of Baal, [l]to burn their sons with fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind:

6 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that [n]this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, but The valley of slaughter.

7 And [o]I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; [p]and I will cause them to fall by the sword before over us than the potter has over the clay, for the potter only gives it its form, whereas we have both matter and form from God. "As the clay is in the potter's hand" to be moulded and shaped as he pleases, "so are ye in my hand."—Henry.

INFATUATED APOSTACY.—Ver. 13—17. The heathen had not apostatized from their false gods, as the Israelites did from the true God. He had espoused the nation as a chaste virgin: but she had committed horrible adulteries. Common sense taught men to value clear waters, which, from the melted snows on Lebanon, were purified by running through the cavities of the rocks, and sprang up in the fields; or to prefer the cold spring-waters from any other place, to the stagnant waters of some dirty pond or cistern: but Israel had forsaken the infinitely glorious JEHOVAH, for worthless idols! and they had caused each other to stumble, and turn aside from the ancient paths, in which their believing ancestors had walked, into such as were unauthorized, and which resembled the deep or rough road, through countries which are seldom travelled. For this sin and folly their land would soon be desolated, and exposed to the derision of every passenger: they would be left to flee before the enemy, as chaff or dust before the east wind; and the Lord would turn his back on them, and show them no favour in their distress.—The sixteenth verse is rendered differently by some translators: but the meaning is clear; and our translation seems preferable to such as are substituted in its place.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. THREATENED DESTRUCTION—THE POTTER'S VESSEL.—Ver. 10—15. The message of wrath delivered in the foregoing verses is here enforced, that it might gain credit two ways: 1. By a visible sign. The prophet was to take along with him an "earthen bottle," and when he had delivered his message, he was to "break the bottle" to pieces, and the same that were auditors of the sermon, must be spectators of the sign. He had compared this people, in the chapter before, to the potter's clay, which is easily marred in the making; but some might say, "It is past that with us, we have been made and hardened long since." "And what though you be," says he, "the potter's vessel is as soon broken in the hands of any man, as the vessel, while it is soft clay, is marred in the potter's hand, and its case is, in this respect, much worse; that the vessel, while it is soft clay, though it be marred, may be moulded again, but after it is hardened, when it is broken it can never be pieced again." Perhaps what they see will affect them more than what they only hear talk of; that is the intention of sacramental signs, and teaching by symbols was anciently used. In the explication of this sign, he must inculcate what he had before said, with a further reference to the place where this was done, in the valley of Tophet. 1. As the bottle was easily, irresistibly, and irrecoverably broken, so "shall Judah and Jerusalem" be broken by the Chaldean army, ver. 11. They depended much upon the firmness of their constitution, and the fixedness of their courage, which they thought hardened them like a vessel of brass; but the prophet shows that all that did but harden them like a vessel of earth, which, though hard, is brittle, and sooner broken than that which is not so hard. Though they were made vessels of honour, still they were vessels of earth, and so they shall be made to know, if they dishonour God and themselves, and serve not the purposes for which they were made. It is God himself who made them that resolves to unmake them; "I will break this people, and this city," dash them in pieces like "a potter's vessel;" the doom of the heathen, Ps. ii. 9, Rev. ii. 27, but now Jerusalem's doom, Isa. xxx. 14. "A potter's vessel," when once broken, "cannot be made whole again; cannot be cured," so the word is. The ruin of Jerusalem shall be an utter ruin: no hand can repair it, but his that broke it; and if they return to him, though he has torn, he will heal. 2. This was done in Tophet. That Tophet should be the receptacle of the slain; "They shall bury in Tophet for want of room to bury elsewhere;" (so some read it;) and if they had had conveniences any where else, they would not have buried there, where all the filth of the city was carried. Or, as we read it, "They shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place to bury" any more there; they shall justle for room to lay their dead; and a very little room will then serve those, who, while they lived, "laid house to house, and field to field." They that would be "placed alone in the midst of the earth," while they were above ground, and obliged all about them to keep their distance, must lie with the multitude when they are underground, for they are innumerable before them.—Henry.

CHAP. XX. JEREMIAH PERSECUTED BY PASHUR.—Ver. 1—6. It might have been expected, that the prophet's plain dealing would exasperate the rulers of Judah, if he did not convince and humble them. Accordingly, we have in this chapter an account of a persecution that he endured, and of his behaviour under it. Pashur, a priest of the race or order of Immer, who under the high priest superintended the affairs of the temple, having heard of the predictions which the prophet had delivered in Tophet; and perhaps being present when he repeated them in the temple, used his authority to punish and silence him, as a troubler of the nation. Having smitten or scourged him as a malefactor, he set him in the stocks, or the pillory, in a public part of the city, and left him there all night, exposed to ignominy as well as pain. This he probably thought would disgrace him with the people, and discourage him from prophesying any more. The prophet seems to have borne the indignity with silence and patience: but when at their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives; and [q]their carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

8 And I will make this city [r]desolate, and an hissing;[4] every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof.

9 And I will cause them [s]to eat the flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend, in the siege and straitness, wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.

10 Then [t]shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee,

11 And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [u]Even so will I break this people, and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be [†]made whole again: and they shall [x]bury them in Tophet, till there be no place to bury.

12 Thus will I do unto this place, saith the LORD, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make this city as Tophet:[5]

13 And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses of the kings of Judah, shall be defiled [y]as the place of Tophet, because of all the houses [z]upon whose roofs[6] they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink-offerings unto other gods.

14 Then came Jeremiah from Tophet, whither the LORD had sent him to prophesy; and [a]he stood in the court of the LORD's house, and said to all the people,

15 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring upon this city, and upon all her towns, all the evil that I have pronounced against it, [b]because they have hardened their necks, that they might not hear my words.

CHAP. XX.

Pashur, smiting Jeremiah, receiveth a new name, and a fearful doom, 1. Jeremiah complaineth of contempt, 7, of treachery, 10, and of his birth, 14.

NOW Pashur the son of [a]Immer the priest, who was also [b]chief governor in the house of the LORD, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things.

2 Then Pashur [c]smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks[1] that were [d]in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the LORD.

3 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The LORD [e]hath not called thy name Pashur, but *Magor-missabib.

4 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, [f]I will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends; and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it: [h]and I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword.

5 Moreover, I will deliver all the [†]strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon.

6 And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thine house, shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shalt be buried there, thou, and [l]all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies.

7 ¶ O LORD, thou hast deceived me, and I was [‡]deceived; [m]thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed: I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me.

8 For since I spake, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil; because [p]the word of the LORD was made a reproach unto me, and a derision, daily.

9 Then I said, [q]I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name: but his word [r]was in mine heart as a burning fire[2] shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay.

10 ¶ For [s]I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. [t]Report, say they, and we will report it. [§]All [u]my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and [x]we shall take our revenge on him.

11 But [y]the LORD is with me as [z]a mighty terrible one; therefore [a]my persecutors shall stumble, [b]and they shall not prevail: they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten.

12 But, O LORD of hosts, that triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart, [c]let me see thy vengeance on them: [d]for unto thee have I opened my cause.

13 Sing unto the LORD, praise ye the LORD; [e]for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of evil-doers.

14 ¶ [h]Cursed be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.

15 Cursed be the man who brought tidings[3] to my father, saying, [i]A man-child is born unto thee, making him very glad.

16 And let that man be [k]as the cities which the LORD overthrew, and repented not: and length Pashur came to set him at liberty, he was directed to inform him that God had named him Magor missabib, or Terror round about; for he would cause him to be alarmed continually, through terrors of conscience and surrounding dangers: he should be so disquieted as to become a terror to himself and to his friends; and having seen some of them slain in the siege of Jerusalem, he and the rest should be carried captive to Babylon: there they should be slain before his eyes; and he should die and be buried there, with all those whom he had deluded by his lies: for he was a false prophet, as well as a persecuting priest.—Probably these predictions made such an impression on Pashur's mind, as to disturb his imagination during all the succeeding events, and to produce the predicted terror.

DEEP ANGUISH AND SELF-EXECRATION OF THE PROPHET.—Ver. 14—18. This is as extraordinary a transition as any in the whole Scriptures; and for aught that appears to the contrary, the prophet related what passed in his experience, according to the order in which it took place. An experimental acquaintance with our own hearts, and the variations of our affections under sharp trials, as encouraging or discouraging thoughts occur to our minds, will best enable us to understand it. We should not think it possible for such rebellion and absurdity to prevail in the heart of a true believer, and to succeed the most vigorous exercises of faith, hope, and love, did we not meet with a few instances of the kind in the word of God; and they, who have been thus tempted of Satan, might be further urged to give up their hope, and to adopt the most desperate measures. Yet such thoughts and wishes are not to be excused: for they are strong proofs of the desperate wickedness of the heart. How absurd was it for a godly man to curse the day of his birth, which no longer had any existence, and was in no degree the cause of his sufferings! To curse the man, who first informed his father of his birth; and even to wish him the doom of Sodom, or that the cry of terror and alarm might never cease to sound in his ears; because he would not murder him when a helpless infant!—How strange to wish such an exquisitely cruel wish to his parent! And all this, because he was called to endure contempt and persecution for a short time, which would be counterbalanced by divine consolations, and terminate in everlasting felicity. So unreasonable are passion and impatience!—"How the children of God are overcome, in this battle of the flesh and the spirit! And into what inconveniences they fall, till God raises them up again!"—Some expositors endeavour to palliate the vehement expressions here used: but this is impossible; and could they effect their purpose, they would also counteract the very design of the Holy Spirit, in recording them; viz., to show what the best of men are when left to themselves, and to preserve tempted believers from despond-ing, when they are harassed in like manner.—Scott.

CHAP. XXI. ZEDEKIAH'S MESSAGE TO THE PROPHET.—Ver. 1, 2. We have been left to conjecture the time, in which most of the preceding prophecies were delivered: but many of those which follow are dated. This chapter leads us forward to the time of Zedekiah, and very near to the captivity: yet we shall frequently be brought back to the preceding reigns. When Nebuchadnezzar had formed the siege of Jerusalem, Zedekiah was anxious to know the event: though it had been so often predicted, that nothing but the most determined incredulity could doubt of it. He was convinced, at some times at least, that Jeremiah was a true prophet, and he sent messengers to him on this occasion; who entreated him to inquire of the Lord, whether he would not appear for their deliverance, according to the wonders which he had formerly wrought for his people, that the siege might be raised: and perhaps they meant to desire his prayers. But they paid no regard to his warnings and exhortations, and made no attempts towards reformation, personal or public.—"Not that the king was touched with repentance, and so sought to God, as Hezekiah did, when he sent to Isaiah: but because the prophet might pray unto God to take away this present plague: as Pharaoh sought unto Moses."—Scott.

THE PROPHET'S REPLY.—Ver. 4—7. It was a very startling, cutting reply, which God, by the prophet, sent to that message. It is here foretold, 1. That God will render all their endeavours for their own security fruitless and ineffectual, ver. 4. "I will be so far from teaching your hands to war, and putting an edge upon your swords, that I will 'turn back the weapons of war that are in your hand,' when ye sally out upon the besiegers to beat them off, so that they shall not give the stroke you design; nay, they shall recoil into your own faces, and be turned upon yourselves." Nothing can make for those who have God against them. 2. That God himself will be their Enemy; and then I know not who can befriend them, no, not Jeremiah himself, ver. 5. "I will be so far from protecting you, as I have done formerly in a like case, that 'I myself will fight against you.'" Note, Those who rebel against God, may justly expect that he will make war upon them. 3. That those who, for their own safety, decline sallying out upon the besiegers, and so avoid their sword, shall yet not escape the sword of God's justice, ver. 6. "I will smite those that abide in the city," (so it may be read,) "both man and beast;" both the beasts that are for food, and those that are for service in war, foot and horse; "they shall die of a great pestilence," which shall rage within the walls, while the enemies are encamped about them. Though Jerusalem's gates and walls may for a time keep out the Chaldeans, they cannot keep out God's Judgments. His arrows of pestilence can reach those that think themselves safe from other arrows. 4. That the king himself, and all the people that escape the "sword, famine," and "pestilence," shall fall "into the hands" of the Chaldeans, who let him hear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noon-tide;

17 Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb to be always great with me.

18 Wherefore came I forth out of the womb to see labour and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame?

CHAP. XXI.

Zedekiah enquireth the event of Nebuchadrezzar's war, 1. A hard siege foretold, 3.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, [a]when king Zedekiah sent unto him [b]Pashur the son of Melchiah, and [c]Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, saying,

2 [d]Enquire, I pray thee, of the LORD for us, (for Nebuchadrezzar[1] king of Babylon maketh war against us,) if so be that the LORD will deal with us [f]according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us.

3 ¶ Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah;

4 Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [g]Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, [h]and I will assemble them into the midst of this city.

5 And [i]I myself will fight against you [k]with an outstretched hand and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath.

6 And [i]I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast: they shall die of a great pestilence.

7 And afterward, saith the LORD, [m]I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword,[2] [n]he shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy.

8 ¶ And unto this people thou shalt say, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, [o]I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.

9 He [p]that abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live, [q]and his life shall be unto him for a prey.

10 For [r]I have set my face against this city for evil, and not for good, saith the LORD; it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire.

11 ¶ And touching the house of the king of Judah, say, Hear ye the word of the LORD;

12 O house of David, thus saith the LORD, *Execute judgment in the morning, and [s]deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, [z]lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

13 ¶ Behold, [a]I am against thee, O †inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain, saith the LORD; which say, [c]Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations?

14 But I will ‡punish you [d]according to the fruit of your doings, saith the LORD; and I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof,[3] and it [f]shall devour all things round about it.

CHAP. XXII.

An exhortation to repentance, 1. The judgment of Shallum, 10, and of Coniah, 20.

THUS saith the LORD; Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word,

2 And say, Hear the word of the LORD, O king of Judah, [c]that sittest upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates;

3 Thus saith the LORD, [e]Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, [g]neither shed innocent blood in this place.

4 For if ye do this thing indeed, [h]then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings sitting *upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people.

5 But [i]if ye will not hear these words, [k]I swear by myself, saith the LORD, [l]that this house shall become a desolation.

6 For thus saith the LORD unto the king's house of Judah, Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon:[1] yet [n]surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited.

7 And I will prepare destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons; and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire.

8 And many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this great city?

9 Then they shall answer, [r]Because they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them.

CHAP. XXII. PERSONS ADDRESSED IN THIS CHAPTER.—Ver. 1. Some interpreters suppose that this chapter contains two distinct messages, the one sent to Jehoiakim, and the other afterwards to Jeconiah or Jehoiachin his son; but there is in it no intimation of this. Others suppose that the whole chapter was addressed to Jeconiah; and that the former part was a recapitulation of messages formerly delivered to Jehoiakim: but there is great difficulty in applying the conclusion of the address to Jeconiah. It hath therefore been supposed, by a few interpreters, that the whole was addressed to Zedekiah, and that it is a continuation of the subject of the preceding chapter. This interpretation I accede to, but without being very confident in so doubtful a matter. If this point could be ascertained, the difficulties would vanish, which, upon other interpretations, are almost, if not quite insuperable, as will be shown; but there is no evidence on either side, except the chapter itself compared with the context, of which the reader will judge for himself.—Yet it seems very reasonable to expect, that after Jeremiah had answered Zedekiah's inquiries by his messengers, the Lord should send him in person to confirm and enforce his word, in the manner here recorded; and the abrupt opening of the chapter, as well as its coincidence with the preceding, favours this opinion. We suppose then, that Zedekiah is addressed, and that the names of the other kings are introduced by way of reminding him that the predictions concerning them, which they had disregarded, had been exactly accomplished; and from this to infer, that those which related to him and the approaching captivity would be so likewise. Coniah, indeed, is last mentioned in the chapter, and Zedekiah is not named in it; but he had been mentioned in the former part of the subject, as the foregoing chapter is supposed to have been; and being here addressed in person as king of Judah, it was not necessary to address him by name.—Scott.

THE LIVING TO BE WEPT FOR.—Ver. 10. "'Weep not for the dead,' weep not any more for Josiah." Jeremiah had been himself a true mourner for him, and had stirred up the people to mourn for him, 2 Chron. xxxv. 25, yet now he will have them go out of mourning for him, though it was but three months after his death, and to turn their tears into another channel, they must weep sore for Jehoahaz, who is gone into Egypt; not that there was any great loss of him to the public, as there was of his father, but that his case was much more deplorable. Josiah went to the grave in peace and honour, was prevented from seeing the evil to come in this world, and removed to see the good to come in the other world; and therefore "Weep not for him," but for his unhappy son, who is likely to live and die in disgrace and misery, a wretched captive. Note, Dying saints may be justly envied, while living sinners are justly pitied. And so dismal, perhaps, the prospect of the times may be, that tears even for a Josiah, even for a Jesus, must be restrained, that they may be received for "ourselves and for our children," Luke xxiii. 28. The reason given is, because he shall never return out of captivity, as he and his people expected, but shall die there. They were loath to believe this, therefore it is repeated here again and again, he shall "return no more."—Henry.

GUILT AND DOOM OF JEHOIAKIM.—Ver. 13—10. These verses evidently relate to Jehoiakim, who succeeded his younger brother Jehoahaz, or Shallum. Jehoiakim, it seems, built a magnificent palace in those calamitous times, the expense of which exceeded his finances; and this introduced a system of iniquity and oppression. He constrained his subjects to work without wages, and never paid for the materials; and in various ways he committed extortion and injustice. "A crying sin, and too common among the great men of the world." [Lowth.]—But did he think that his house of cedar would secure his authority, or prolong his reign? His pious father affected not such splendour; but he lived in plenty and hospitality, without injuring any of his subjects; and his clear conscience and character, the love of his people, and above all, the favour of God, were far preferable to Jehoiakim's guilty and odious magnificence. Moreover, Josiah was the patron of the poor, and his throne was established in righteousness: and his obedience to God, and imitation of his justice, truth, and goodness, in the exercise of his authority, proved that he knew and loved him. But Jehoiakim was continually looking out for opportunities of gratifying his abominable avarice; in pursuit of iniquitous gain, he committed murder and every kind of oppression; and thus he became odious to his subjects; so that it was predicted, that when he should be prematurely cut off, his relation would not grieve for him as a brother, nor his people as a ruler, nor would any lament that his glory was turned into ignominy; and after his death his body would be treated with the utmost contempt, and buried with the burial of an ass; which creatures, when they died in the city, would be dragged forth to some place without the gates, where rubbish was thrown, there to be devoured by dogs, or to putrify above ground.—Scott.

CONIAH.—Ver. 28. "Is this Coniah, the despised broken idol?" Yes, certainly, he is and much debased from what he was. 1. Time was when he was dignified, nay, when he was almost deified. This people who had seen his father lately deposed, were ready to adore him when they saw him upon the throne; but now "he is a despised broken 20 ¶ Go up to Lebanon,[4] and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages: for all thy lovers are destroyed.

21 I [q]spake unto thee in thy [‖]prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear: this hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyedst not my voice.

22 The [s]wind shall eat up all thy pastors, and [u]thy lovers shall go into captivity; [x]surely then shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness.

23 O [*]inhabitant of [y]Lebanon, that makest thy nest in the cedars, [a]how gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail!

24 As I live, saith the LORD, though [b]Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence;

25 And [d]I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born; and there shall ye die.

27 But to the land whereunto they [†]desire to return, thither shall they not return.

28 Is this man [§]Coniah [b]a despised broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land [k]which they know not?

29 O [l]earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the LORD.

30 Thus saith the LORD, [m]Write ye this man childless,[5] a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah.

CHAP. XXIII.

Jeremiah prophesieth a restoration of the scattered flock, 1. God's fearful judgments against false prophets, 9.

WOE be [a]unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the LORD.

2 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people, Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them; behold, [b]I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the LORD.

3 And [c]I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase.

4 And [d]I will set up shepherds over them, which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the LORD.

5 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that [§]I will raise unto David a righteous Branch,[1] and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.

6 In [k]his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall [l]dwell safely; [m]and this is his name whereby he shall be called, [*]THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

7 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that they shall no more say, The LORD liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

8 But, The LORD liveth, which brought up, and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; [o]and they shall dwell in their own land.

idol," which when it was whole, was worshipped; but when it is rotten and broken, is thrown by and "despised," and nobody regards it, or remembers what it has been. Note, What is idolized will, first or last, be "despised" and "broken;" what is unjustly honoured, will be justly contemned, and rivals with God will be the scorn of man. Whatever we idolize we shall be disappointed in, and then shall "despise." 2. Time was when he was delighted in; but now he is "a vessel in which is no pleasure," or to which there is no desire, either because grown out of fashion, or because cracked or dirtied, and so rendered unserviceable. Those whom God has no pleasure in will, some time or other, be so mortified, that men will have no pleasure in them.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. CHRIST—THE BRANCH.—Ver. 5. Christ is here spoken of as a "Branch from David," the "Man the Branch;" Zech. iii. 8, his appearance mean, his beginnings small, like those of a bud or sprout, and his rise seemingly out of the earth, but growing to be green, to be great, to be loaded with fruits. A branch from David's family, when it seemed to be a "root in a dry ground," buried, and not likely to revive. Christ is the "Root and offspring of David," Rev. xxii. 16. In him doth the "horn of David bud," Ps. cxxxii. 17, 18. He is a Branch of God's raising up; he sanctified him, and sent him into the world, gave him his commission and qualifications. He is a righteous Branch, for he is righteous himself, and through him many, even all that are his, are made righteous; as an Advocate, he is "Jesus Christ the righteous."

CHRIST—OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.—Ver. 6. As God, he is "Jehovah," the incommunicable name of God, denoting his eternity and self-existence. As Mediator, he is "our Righteousness;" by making satisfaction to the justice of God, for the sin of man; he has brought in an everlasting righteousness, and so made it over to us in the covenant of grace, that, upon our believing consent to that covenant, it becomes ours. His being "Jehovah our Righteousness" implies that he is so "our Righteousness" as no creature could be. He is a sovereign, all-sufficient, eternal Righteousness. All our righteousness has its being from him, and by him it subsists, and we are made the righteousness of God in him. The profession and declaration of this; "This is the name whereby he shall be called;" not only he shall be so, but he shall be known to be so. God shall call him by this name, for he shall appoint him to be "our righteousness." By this name Israel shall call him, every true believer shall call him, and call upon him. That is "our righteousness," by which, as an allowed plea, we are justified before God, acquitted from guilt, and accepted into favour; and nothing else have we to plead but this, "Christ has died, yea, rather, is risen again;" and we have taken him for our Lord.

THE TRUE ORACLES.—Ver. 28. "The prophet that has a dream," which was the way of inspiration that the false prophets most pretended to, if he has a dream, "let him tell it as a dream." Those that have spiritual senses exercised will be able to distinguish, for "what is the chaff to the wheat?" The promises of peace which these prophets make to you, are no more to be compared to God's promises, than chaff to wheat. Men's fancies are light, and vain, and worthless, as the chaff "which the wind drives away." But the word of God has substance in it; it is of value, is food for the soul, the bread of life. What was the staple commodity of Canaan, that valley of vision, Deut. viii. 8; Ezek. xxvii. 17. There is as much difference between the vain fancies of men, and the pure word of God, as between the "chaff" and the "wheat." It follows, ver. 29, "Is not my word like a fire, saith the Lord?" Is their word so? Has it the power and efficacy that the word of God has? No, nothing like it; there is no more comparison than between painted fire and real fire. Theirs is like an ignis fatuus—a deceiving meteor, leading men into by-paths and dangerous precipices. Note, The word of God is like fire. The law was a fiery law, Deut. xxxii. 2; and of the gospel Christ says, "I am come to send fire on the earth," Luke xii. 49. Fire has different effects, according as the matter is on which it works; it hardens clay, but softens wax; it consumes the dross, but purifies the gold; so the word of God is to some "a savour of life unto life, to others of death unto death." God appeals here to the consciences of those to whom the word was sent; "'Is not my word like fire?' Has it not been so to you? Zech. i. 6. Speak as you have found." It is compared likewise to a "hammer breaking the rock in pieces." The unhumbled heart of man is like a rock; if it will not be melted by the word of God as the fire, it will be "broken to pieces" by it as "the hammer." Whatever opposition is given to the word, it will be borne down and broken to pieces.—Henry.

FALSE PROPHETS.—Ver. 13—15. The false prophets of Samaria, who had foolishly and impiously prophesied in the name of Baal, deluded the Israelites into those idolatries that ruined the nation; yet the Lord considered the false prophets of Jerusalem who prophesied lies in his name, as guilty of more horrible and abominable wickedness. For they were abandoned to adultery and deceit; and their prophesying was a constant imposture, by which the people were hardened and emboldened in iniquity, in the expectation of peace and prosperity, and prejudiced against the true prophets, who called on them to return from their wickedness. Thus the whole nation were become as odious to the Lord as the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah; and would soon be visited with judgments almost as tremendous. But the prophets would be constrained to drink the most bitter part of this cup of God's indignation; as their false doctrine, pretended visions, and corrupt examples, had spread impiety throughout the land, and frustrated all the means used to retard its progress. The prophets of Judah "pronounced their cause of the prophets; all my bones shake: I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome, because of the LORD, and because of the words of his holiness.

10 For the land is [r]full of adulterers; for because of [†]swearing[2] the land mourneth; the pleasant places of the wilderness are dried up, and their [‡]course is evil, and their force is not right.

11 For [s]both prophet and priest are profane: yea, [t]in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the LORD.

12 Wherefore their way shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness; they shall be driven on, and fall therein: for I will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

13 And I have seen [*]folly in [c]the prophets of Samaria; they [d]prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err.

14 I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem [†]an horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies; they [b]strengthen also the hands of evil-doers, that none doth return from his wickedness: they are all of them unto me as Sodom, and the inhabitants thereof as Gomorrah.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts concerning the prophets, Behold, [k]I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall: for from the prophets of Jerusalem is [‡]profaneness gone forth into all the land.

16 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [l]Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you; they make you vain: they speak [m]a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the LORD.

17 They say still unto them [o]that despise me, The LORD hath said, [p]Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the [§]imagination of his own heart, [q]No evil shall come upon you.

18 For [r]who hath stood in the [‖]counsel of the LORD, and hath perceived and heard his word? who hath marked his word, and heard it?

19 Behold, [¶]a whirlwind of the LORD is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked.

20 The anger of the LORD shall not return, until he hath executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart: in the latter days[3] ye shall consider it perfectly.

21 I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran; I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied.

22 But if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, [x]then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings.

23 Am [a]I a God at hand, saith the LORD, and not a God afar off?

24 Can any [b]hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the LORD. [c]Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the LORD.

25 I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed.

26 [f]How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart;

27 Which [h]think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams, which they tell every man to his neighbour, [i]as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal.

28 The prophet [*]that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him [k]speak my word faithfully: what is the chaff to the wheat?[4] saith the LORD.

29 Is not my word like as a fire? saith the LORD; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?

30 Therefore, behold, [m]I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that steal my words every one from his neighbour.

31 Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that [†]use their tongues, and say, He saith.

32 Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams, saith the LORD, and do tell them, and cause my people [n]to err by their lies, [*]and by their [‡]lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: [p]therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the LORD.

33 ¶ And when this people,[5] or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, [q]What is the burden of the LORD? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? [r]I will even forsake you, saith the LORD.

34 And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the LORD, I will even [§]punish that man and his house.

35 Thus shall ye say [*]every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the LORD answered? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

36 And the burden of the LORD shall ye mention no more; for every man's word[6] shall be his burden: [t]for ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the LORD of hosts our God.

37 Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the LORD answered thee? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

prophecies in the name of the true God, and entitled him to all their impostures; the wickedness of their lives also reflected a dishonour on his name and religion." [Lowth.]—Scott.

CANT OF THE FALSE PROPHETS.—Ver. 33—37. They asked, "What is the burthen of the Lord?" ver. 33, 34. They say, "The burthen of the Lord," ver 38. This was the word that gave great offence to God, that whenever they spake of "the word of the Lord," they called it, in scorn and derision, "the burthen of the Lord." Now, 1. This was the word that the prophets much used, and used it seriously, to show what a weight the word of God was upon their spirits, of what importance it was, and how pressingly it should come upon those that heard it. The words of the false prophets had nothing ponderous in them, but God's words had; those were as chaff, these as wheat. Now the profane scoffers took this word, and made a jest and a bye-word of it; they made people merry with it, so that, when the prophets used it, they might not make people serious with it. Note, It has been the artifice of Satan, in all ages, to obstruct the efficacy of sacred things by turning them into matters of sport and ridicule; the mocking of God's messengers was the baffling of his messages. 2. Perhaps this word was caught at and reproached at by the scoffers as an improper word, new-coined by the prophets, and not used in that sense by any classic author. It was only in this and the last age, that the "word of the Lord" was called the "burthen of the Lord," and it could not be found in their lexicons to have that signification. But if men take a liberty, as we see they do, to form new phrases which they think more expressive and significant in other parts of learning, why not in divinity? But especially we must observe it as a rule, that the Spirit of God is not tied to our rules of speaking. 3. Some think that, because, when the "word of the Lord" is called a "burthen," it signifies some word of reproof and threatening, which would lay a load upon the hearers, (yet I know not whether that observation will always hold,) that in using this word, "the burthen of the Lord," in a canting way, they reflected upon God as always bearing hard upon them, always teasing them, always frightening them, and so making the word of God a perpetual uneasiness to them. They make the word of God a burthen to themselves, and then quarrel with the ministers for making it a burthen to them. Thus the scoffers of the latter days, while they slight heaven and salvation, reproach faithful ministers for preaching hell and damnation. Upon the whole, we may observe, That how light soever men may make of it, the great God takes notice of, and is much displeased with, those who burlesque sacred things, and who, that they may make a jest of scripture-truths and laws, put jests upon scripture-language. In such wit as this I am sure there is no wisdom, and so it will appear at last. "Be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong." Those that were here guilty of this sin, were some of the false prophets, who perhaps came to steal the word of God from the true prophets, some of the priests, who perhaps came to seek occasions against them, on which to ground an information, and some of the people, who had learned of the profane priests and prophets to play with the things of God. The people would not have affronted the prophet and his God thus, if the priests and the prophets, those ringleaders of mischief, had not shown them the way—Henry.

CHAP. XXIV. SYMBOLS OF THE TWO BASKETS OF FIGS.—Ver. 1. "The vision represented two such baskets of figs, as used to be offered up for first-fruits at the temple, Deut. xxvi. 2." [Lowth.] Ver. 5. "The Jews, who were left in their own country, thought themselves better beloved of God, than their brethren who were carried away captive. To check this vain confidence, God promises to show the latter particular signs of his favour in a strange land; and to show distinguishing marks of his displeasure on the former." [Lowth.] Ver. 7. Many of the more pious Jews were carried away captive with Jeconiah, or before him, among whom were Daniel and his companions, and Ezekiel likewise. The afflictions of the captives were suited to humble and lead them to repentance; whilst those who remained at Jerusalem became more and more hardened in presumption and rebellion. But whatever means were used, the power of divine grace effected the grand difference betwixt them. The Lord promised to give the captives a heart, (a proper disposition of mind,) to "know him" in the glory of his perfections, and in his relations unto them: and this knowledge would induce them to renounce all idols and iniquities, and to return to his worship and service with their whole heart. And thus they would be acknowledged as his people, and he would be their God, their portion, protector, and salvation: and he would take care of them, as a man would of the best and most valued produce of the fig-tree. Doubtless, a great reformation and revival of religion took place among the captives, and by them and their descendants the land was afterwards chiefly replenished; for they who remained in Judea, were in general destroyed, or driven into Egypt, whence few, if any, of them returned; or they were carried to distant regions, and detained in slavery.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The professors of true religion are presented before God, to be devoted to his glory, and employed in doing good to mankind; as the first-fruits of the fig-tree were brought to the temple, to be used by the priests and Levites. Indeed, none of the human race are so good and useful as true believers; but none are so vile and worthless as hypocrites: thus the good are very good, and the bad very bad, more than among other men, Matt. v. 13. But the Lord often spares those longest, and exempts them most from present suffering, whom he hath appointed unto wrath. As

By good and bad figs, 1, the prophet foresheweth their restoration from captivity, 4, and the desolation of Zedekiah and the rest, 8.

THE LORD shewed me, and, behold, [b]two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the LORD, [c]after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths,[1] from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

2 One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe: and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, *they were so bad.

3 Then said the LORD unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good, and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

4 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, Like these good figs, [h]so will I acknowledge †them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good.

6 For [k]I will set mine eyes upon them for good, [l]and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down;[2] and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.

7 And [n]I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the LORD; [o]and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart.

8 And [q]as the evil figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the LORD, [r]So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, [s]and them that dwell in the land of Egypt; many as he loves, he rebukes and chastens: and when the loss of estates, liberty, and country, and a complication of hardships and calamities, are sanctified to the saving of their souls; these appear to be the methods by which God acknowledges his choice of them, and his purpose of doing them good. He alone can remove the pride, enmity, and blindness of the carnal mind, and give men hearts to know, fear, love, and trust in him: when this change takes place, they cordially return to him in his appointed way.—Scott.

CHAP. XXV. GOD'S CARE IN INSTRUCTING HIS PEOPLE.—Ver. 1—4. Jeremiah, for his part, had been a constant preacher among them 23 years; he began in the 13th year of Josiah, who reigned 31 years, so that he prophesied about 18 or 19 years in his reign, then in the reign of Jehoahaz, and now 4 years of Jehoiakim's reign. Note, God keeps an account, whether we do or no, how long we have enjoyed the means of grace; and the longer we have enjoyed them, the heavier will our account be if we have not improved them. "These three years" (these three-and-twenty years) "have I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree." All this while, 1. God had been constant in sending messages to them, as there was occasion for them; "From that time 'to this very day, the word of the Lord has come unto me,' for your use." Though they had the substance of the warning sent them already in the books of Moses, yet, because those were not duly regarded and applied, God sent to enforce them, and make them more particular, that they might be without excuse. Thus God's Spirit was striving with them, as with the old world, Gen. vi. 3. 2. Jeremiah had been faithful and industrious in delivering those messages; he could appeal to themselves, as well as to God and his own conscience, concerning this, "I have spoken to you, rising early and speaking." He had declared to them "the whole counsel of God;" he had taken a great deal of care and pains to discharge his trust in such a manner as might be most likely to win and work upon them. What men are solicitous about, and intent upon, they rise up early to prosecute. It intimates that his head was so full of thoughts about it, and his heart so intent upon doing good, that it broke his sleep, and made him get up betimes to project which way he might take, that would be most likely to do them good. He rose early, both because he would lose no time, and because he would lay hold on and improve the best time to work upon them, when, if ever, they were sober and sedate. Christ came "early in the morning" to preach in the temple, and the people as early to hear him, Luke xxi. 38. Morning-lectures have their advantages. "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning." Beside him, God had sent them other prophets, on the same errand, ver. 4. Of the writing prophets, Micah, Nahum, and Habakkuk, were a little before him, and Zephaniah contemporary with him. But, besides those, there were many other of God's "servants the prophets," who preached awakening sermons, which were never published. And here God himself is said to "rise early," and "send them;" intimating how much his heart also was upon it, that this people should "turn and live," and not "go on and die," Ezek. xxxiii. 11. 3. All the messages sent them were to the purpose, and much to the same purpose. They all told them of their faults, "their evil way," and the "evil of their doings." Those were not of God's sending, who flattered them, as if there was nothing amiss among them.

GREAT DESOLATION—THE PENALTY OF DISOBEDIENCE.—Ver. 10. "The whole land shall be a desolation;" not only desolate, but a desolation itself, both city and country shall be laid waste, and all the wealth of both be made a prey of; it shall be lasting, even "perpetual desolations;" they shall continue so long in ruins, and after long waiting there shall appear so little prospect of relief, that every one shall call it "perpetual." This desolation shall be the ruin of their credit among their neighbours; it shall bury their honour in the dust, shall "make them an astonishment and a hissing;" every one will be amazed at them, and hiss them off the stage of action with just disgrace, for deserting a God who would have been their Protection, for impostors who would certainly be their destruction. It will likewise be the ruin of all their comfort among themselves; it shall be a final period of all their joy; "I will take from them the voice of mirth," hang their harps on the willow-trees, and put them out of tune for songs. "I will take from them the voice of mirth;" they shall neither have cause for it, nor hearts for it. They would not hear the voice of God's word, and therefore the "voice of mirth" shall no more be heard among them. They shall be deprived of food; "the sound of the millstones shall not be heard," for when the enemy has seized their stores, "the sound of the grinding" must needs be low, Eccl. xii. An end shall be put to all business, there shall not be seen "the light of a candle," for there shall be no work to be done worth candle-light. And, lastly, they shall be deprived of their liberty; "Those nations shall serve the king of Babylon 70 years."

DOOM OF MANY NATIONS. Ver. 15—27. Jeremiah took the cup, and "made all the nations to drink of it," that is, he prophesied concerning each of the nations here mentioned, that they should share in this great desolation that was coming. "Jerusalem and the cities of Judah" are put first, ver. 18, for "judgment begins at the house of God," 1 Pet. iv. 17; at the sanctuary, Ezek. ix. 6. Whether Nebuchadnezzar had his eye principally on Jerusalem and Judah in this expedition or no, does not appear; probably he had; for it was as considerable as any of the nations here mentioned; however, God had his eye principally to them. And this part of the prophecy was already begun to be accomplished; this is denoted by that melancholy parenthesis, ("as it is this day,") for in tion, saith the LORD, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations.

13 And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath [t]prophesied against all the nations.

14 For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also: [s] and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

15 ¶ For thus saith the LORD God of Israel unto me, [y]Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and [z]cause all the nations to whom I send thee to drink it.

16 And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad,[6] because of the sword that I will send among them.

26 And all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth: [a]and the king of Sheshach[8] shall drink after them.

27 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, [d]because of the sword which I will send among you.

28 And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [e]Ye shall certainly drink.

29 For, lo, [f]I begin to bring evil on the city [‖]which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for [g]I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the LORD of hosts.

30 Therefore prophesy thou against them all these words, and say unto them, The LORD shall roar from on high,[9] and utter his voice from his holy habitation; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation; he shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes, against all the inhabitants of the earth.

31 A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth: for the LORD hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the LORD.

32 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, [n]evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

33 And [o]the slain of the LORD shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth: [p]they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground.

34 ¶ Howl, ye shepherds, and cry; and wallow yourselves in the ashes, ye principal of the flock: for [*]the days of your slaughter, and of your dispersions, are accomplished; and [s]ye shall fall like a [†]pleasant vessel.

35 [t]And [‡]the shepherds shall have no way to flee, nor the principal of the flock to escape.

36 A voice of the [u]cry of the shepherds, and an howling of the principal of the flock, shall be heard: for the LORD hath spoiled their pasture.

37 And [x]the peaceable habitations are cut down, because of the fierce anger of the LORD.

the fourth year of Jehoiakim things were come into a very bad posture, and all the foundations were out of course. "Pharaoh, king of Egypt," comes next, because the Jews trusted to that broken reed, ver. 19; the remains of them fled to Egypt, and then Jeremiah particularly foretold the destruction of that country, chap. xliii. 10, 11. All the other nations that bordered upon Canaan must pledge Jerusalem in this bitter cup, this cup of trembling. The "mingled people," the Arabians so some; some rovers of divers nations, that lived by rapine, so others; "the kings of the land Uz," joined to the country of the Edomites. The Philistines had been vexatious to Israel, but now their cities and their lords became a prey to this mighty conqueror. Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre and Zidon, are places well known to border upon Israel; the "Isles beyond," or "beside the sea," are supposed to be those parts of Phœnicia and Syria, that lay upon the coast of the Mediterranean sea. Dedan, and the other countries mentioned, ver. 23, 24, seem to have lain upon the confines of Idumea and Arabia the desert. Those of Elam are the Persians, with whom the Medes are joined, now looked upon as inconsiderable, and yet afterwards able to make reprisals upon Babylon for themselves and all their neighbours. The "kings of the north," that lay nearer to Babylon, and others that lay up at some distance, will be sure to be seized on, and made a prey of, by the victorious sword of Nebuchadnezzar. Nay, he shall push on his victories with such incredible fury and success, that all the kingdoms of the world that were then and there known, should become sacrifices to his ambition. Thus Alexander is said to have conquered "the world," and the Roman empire is called "the world," Luke ii. 1. Or it may be taken as reading the doom of "all the kingdoms" of the earth; one time or other they shall feel the dreadful effects of war. The world has been, and will be, a great cock-pit, while men's lusts war as they do "in their members," James iv. 1. But that the conquerors may see their fate with the conquered, it concludes, "The king of Sheshach shall drink after them," that is, the king of Babylon himself, who has given his neighbours all this trouble and vexation, shall at length have it return upon his own head. That by Sheshach is meant Babylon, is plain, from chapter li. 41; but whether it was another name of the same city, or the name of another city of the same kingdom, is uncertain. Babylon's ruin was foretold, ver. 12, 13. Upon this prophecy of its being the author of the ruin of so many nations, it was very fitly repeated here again. When God sends the sword upon a nation, with warrant to make it desolate, it soon becomes like a drunken man, filled with confusion at the alarms of war, put into a hurry; its counsellors mad, and at their wits' end, staggering in all the measures they take, all the motions they make; sick at heart with continual vexation; "vomiting up the riches" they have greedily "swallowed down," Job xx. 15, "falling" down before the enemy, and as unable to get up again, or do any thing to help themselves, as a man "dead drunk is," Hab. ii. 16.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVI. AWFUL WARNING.—Ver. 2—6. Jeremiah assures the people that if they continued obstinate to all the calls God gave them, and would persist in their disobedience, it would certainly end in the ruin of their city and temple, 1. That which God required of them was, that they should be observant of what he had said to them, both by the written word and by his ministers; that they should "walk in all his law which he set before them," the law of Moses, and the ordinances and commandments of it; and that they should "hearken to the words of his servants the prophets," who pressed nothing upon them but what was agreeable to the law of Moses, which was "set before them" as a touchstone to try the spirits by; and by this they were distinguished from the false prophets, who drew them from the law, instead of drawing them to it. The law was what God himself "set before them." The prophets were "his own servants," and were immediately sent by him to them, and sent with a great deal of care and concern, "rising early to send them," lest they should come too late, when their prejudices had got possession, and were come invincible. They had hitherto been deaf both to the law and to the prophets; "Ye have not hearkened;" all he expects now is, that at length they should heed what he said, and make his word their rule. A reasonable demand! 2. That which is threatened in case of refusal is, that this city, and the temple in it, shall fare as their predecessors did, Shiloh and the tabernacle there, for a like refusal to walk in God's law, and hearken to his prophets, then when the present dispensation of prophecy just began in Samuel. Now could a sentence be expressed more unexceptionably? Is it not a rule of justice, Parium par sit ratio—Let those whose cases are the same be dealt with alike? If Jerusalem be like Shiloh in respect of sin, why should it not be like Shiloh in respect of punishment? Can any other be expected? This was not the first time he had given them warning to this effect, chap. vii. 12—14. When the temple, which was the glory of Jerusalem, was destroyed, the city was thereby "made a curse;" for the temple was that which made it a blessing. "If the salt lose" that "savour, it is thenceforth good for nothing." It shall be "a curse," it shall be the pattern of a curse: if a man would curse any city, he would say, "God make it like Jerusalem!" Note, Those that will not be subject to the "commands" of God, make themselves subject to the "curse of God."—Henry.

TRIAL OF JEREMIAH.—Ver. 12—15. The calm intrepidity, the disinterested faithfulness, and the meekness of wisdom manifested in the prophet's answer, in such trying circumstances, are peculiarly admirable. Conscious that he had spoken nothing but what

3 If so be they will hearken, and turn every man from his evil way, that I may repent me of the evil which I purpose to do unto them, because of the evil of their doings.

4 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD, [f]If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law, which I have set before you,

5 To hearken to the words of [g]my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early, and sending them, but ye have not hearkened;

6 Then [h]will I make this house like Shiloh, and will make this city [i]a curse to all the nations of the earth.

7 So the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the LORD.

8 ¶ Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the LORD had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that the priests, and the prophets,[1] and all the people, took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die.

9 [m]Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the LORD, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? [n]And all the people were gathered against Jeremiah in the house of the LORD.[2]

10 ¶ When [p]the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the LORD, and sat down *in the entry of [q]the new gate of the LORD's house.

11 Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes, and to all the people,[3] [r]saying, [t]This man is worthy to die; [u]for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears.

12 ¶ Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes, and to all the people, saying, [v]The LORD sent me to prophesy against this house, and against this city, all the words that ye have heard.

13 Therefore now [w]amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the LORD your God; and the LORD will [x]repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you.

14 As for me, behold, [y]I am in your hand; [4] do with me [z]as seemeth good and meet unto you:

15 But know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: [a]for of a truth the LORD hath sent me unto you, to speak all these words in your ears.

16 ¶ Then said the princes and all the people unto the priests, and to the prophets,

But it is more probable that the elders concluded their speeches (ver. 19); and that the writer of the narrative goes on to observe, in his own person, that, notwithstanding the precedent of Micah, there had been a later precedent in the present reign, which might have operated very unfavourably to Jeremiah, but for the influence and authority of Ahikam, which were exerted to save him.—BLAYNEY.

20 And there was also a man[5] that prophesied in the name of the LORD, Urijah the son of Shemaiah of [k]Kirjath-jearim, who prophesied against this city, and against this land, according to all the words of Jeremiah:

21 And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men, and all the princes, heard his words, the king sought to put him to death: but when Urijah heard it, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt;

CHAP. XXVII.

Under the type of bonds and yokes, Jeremiah prophesieth the subjection of the neighbouring kings to Nebuchadnezzar.

IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus *saith the LORD to me, [b]Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck,

3 And send them [d]to the king of Edom,[1] and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyrus, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of [e]the messengers which came to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah;

4 And command them [7]to say unto their masters, Thus saith [f]the LORD of hosts, the God had commanded him to speak, he seems to have been very solicitous concerning the event as to himself; but his disinterested love to his ungrateful people, united with fervent zeal for the honour of God in leading him to seize the opportunity of, once more, in the most solemn and pathetic manner, exhorting them to repentance, and of warning them not to add to all their other personal and national transgressions, the guilt of innocent blood, with this peculiar aggravation, that it would be the blood of a prophet, shed for faithfully obeying the command of God. Ver. 16, 19. Some expositors consider the remainder of this chapter as the debate which took place in the sanhedrim, or council, on the case of Jeremiah: but as the people were present, part of the time at least, and as no mention is made of the council, but merely of the princes and certain elders, perhaps what is here recorded took place in the court of the temple; and the subsequent verses were added by the prophet to illustrate the narrative.—"The people, who before were forward to condemn him, now, upon hearing his apology, were as ready to acquit him." [Lowth.]—They before united with the priests and prophets, but now some of them concurred with the princes, who refused to pronounce the sentence of death against Jeremiah, ver. 24. "Not against this man the sentence of death." It does not appear whether "the elders of the land" were some of the princes before mentioned, or other eminent persons, who adduced very appositely the example of Micah, and quoted his words in support of their determination, and against the rash judgment of priests and prophets. There is no satisfactory ground in the following history to conclude that either these princes or elders in general so attended to the message of God, as to repent of their sins, or to attempt a public reformation, though they seem at this time to have had transient convictions, which the Lord made use for his servant's preservation.—Scott.

HIS DELIVERANCE.—Ver. 24. Though Urijah was lately put to death, and persecutors, when they have tasted the blood of saints, are apt to thirst after more, (as Herod, Acts xii. 2, 3,) yet God wonderfully preserved Jeremiah, though he did not flee as Urijah did, but stood his ground. Ordinary ministers may use ordinary means, provided they be lawful ones, for their own preservation; but they that had an extraordinary mission might expect an extraordinary protection. God raised up a friend for Jeremiah, whose hand was with him; he took him by the hand in a friendly way, encouraged him, assisted him, appeared for him. It was "Ahikam, the son of Shaphan," one that was a minister of state in Josiah's time; we read of him 2 Kings xxii. 12. Some think Gedaliah was the son of this Ahikam. He had a great interest, it should seem, among the princes, and he used it in favour of Jeremiah, to prevent the further designs of the priests and prophets against him, who would have had him turned over "into the hand of the people;" not those people, ver. 16, that had adjudged him innocent, but the rude and insolent mob, whom they could persuade by their cursed insinuations not only to cry, "Crucify him, crucify him," but to "stone him to death" in a popular tumult; for perhaps Jehoiakim had been so reproached by his own conscience for slaying Urijah, that they despaired of making him the tool of their malice. Note, God can, when he pleases, raise up great men to patronize good men; and it is an encouragement to us to trust him in the way of duty, that he has all men's hearts in his hands.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVII. UNCONTROLLED SOVEREIGNTY.—Ver. 4—9. "God is the sole Lord and proprietor of the world; and by virtue of his absolute sovereignty, he has a right to give the kingdoms of the earth to whomsoever he pleases, and he exercises this authority, by 'changing times and seasons,' by 'removing kings and setting up kings.'—It is the business of human laws to establish every government in that method, wherein it is already settled: but as this is no bar to Providence, who still has a right to alter governments, and, for great and wise reasons, often changes the scene of worldly affairs; so neither ought it to be an objection against submitting to any persons, whom God's providence hath placed over us, and put into their hands the full power of exercising all those acts of government in which sovereignty consists.—But although the people are bound in such cases to obey, yet this does not lessen the guilt of usurpers." [Lowth.]—There was a peculiar grandeur, as well as propriety, in this mode of predicting Nebuchadnezzar's rapid successes.—The God of Israel, declaring himself to be the Lord of all armies, and the Creator and owner of the whole earth, with all its inhabitants and productions, and claiming full sovereignty over all his creatures; avows his determination, (for reasons which he does not deign to assign,) to give all the countries in that part of the world to the king of Babylon, whom he calls "his servant," because he would accomplish an important part of his most righteous designs. They therefore, who would escape the most dreadful judgments, must submit to the God of Israel by submitting to Nebuchadnezzar; they must hearken to, (believe and obey,) the prophets of Israel, and not to their own diviners and enchanters; and they must observe, that Nebuchadnezzar and his son, and grandson, would, whatever opposition might be made, possess the full dominion of all these countries; but that when the appointed time was expired, these haughty conquerors and cruel oppressors, would, in their turn, become the prey of other powerful conquerors and oppressors.—This prophecy would, no doubt, be made known, in some degree, among the principal persons in the adjacent countries; and though for the present neglected, when it received its exact accomplishment, it must have been a very conclusive proof that the God of Israel was the only true God

God of Israel, Thus shall ye say unto your masters;

5 I have [s]made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power, and by my out-stretched arm, [h]and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me.

6 And now have [i]I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, [k]my servant; [l]and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him.

7 And [m]all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son,[3] until the very time of his land come; and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him.

8 And it shall come to pass, that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, [p]that nation will I punish, saith the LORD, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand.

9 Therefore [q]hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your [r]dreamers, nor to your enchanters, nor to your sorcerers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon:

10 For [t]they prophesy a lie unto you, to remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish.[4]

11 But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, [u]those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the LORD; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.

12 ¶ I spake also to Zedekiah king of Judah[5] according to all these words, saying, Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live.

13 [x]Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the LORD hath spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon?

14 Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

15 For I have not sent them, saith the LORD, yet they prophesy [s]a lie in my name; [b]that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, [c]ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you.

16 Also I spake to the priests, and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying, [d]Behold, the vessels of the LORD's house[6] shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

17 Hearken not unto them; [e]serve the king of Babylon, and live: [f]wherefore should this city be laid waste?

18 But if they be prophets, and if the word of the LORD be with them, [g]let them now make intercession to the LORD of hosts, that the vessels which are left in the house of the LORD, and in the house of the king of Judah, and at Jerusalem, go not to Babylon.

19 ¶ For thus saith the LORD of hosts [h]concerning the pillars,[7] and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city,

20 Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not, when he carried away captive [i]Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem;

21 Yea, thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, concerning the vessels that remain in the house of the LORD, and in the house of the king of Judah and of Jerusalem;

22 They shall be [k]carried to Babylon, and there shall they be [l]until the day that I visit them,[8] saith the LORD: [m]then will I bring them up, and restore them to this place.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Hananiah's false prophecy, 1: he breaketh Jeremiah's yoke, 10. Jeremiah foretelleth of an iron yoke, 12, and Hananiah's death, 15.

AND it came to pass the same year, [a]in the beginning[1] of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, and in the fifth month, that [b]Hananiah the son of Azur [c]the prophet, which was of Gibeon, spake unto me in the house of the LORD, in the presence of the priests, and of all the people, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, [d]I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.[2]

3 Within two *full years will I bring again into this place [e]all the vessels of the LORD's house [f]that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon:

4 And I will bring again to this place [g]Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the [†]captives of Judah, that went into Babylon, saith the LORD: for I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon.

5 ¶ Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah, in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all the people that stood [h]in the house of the LORD,

6 Even the prophet Jeremiah said. [i]Amen:[3]

WARNING AGAINST FALSE PROPHETS.—Ver. 12—22. Two things their prophets flattered them into the belief of. 1. That the power which the king of Babylon had gained over them, should now shortly be broken. They said, "'You shall not serve the king of Babylon;' you need not submit voluntarily, for you shall not be compelled to submit." This they prophesied "in the name of the Lord," as if God had sent them to the people on this errand, in kindness to them, that they might not disparage themselves by an inglorious surrender. But it was a lie. They said that God sent them; but that was false, he disowns it, "I have not sent them, saith the Lord." They said that they should never be brought into subjection to the king of Babylon; but that was false too, the event proved it so. They said, that to hold out to the last would be the way to secure themselves and their city; but that was false, for it would certainly end in their being driven out, and perishing. So that it was all a lie, from first to last; and the prophets that deceived the people with these lies, did, in the issue, but deceive themselves, the blind leaders and the blind followers fell together into the ditch; that "ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you;" who will be so far from warranting your security, that they cannot secure themselves. Note, They that encourage sinners to go on in their sinful ways, will in the end perish with them. 2. They prophesied that the vessels of the temple, which the king of Babylon had already carried away, should now shortly be brought back; this they fed the priests with the hopes of, knowing how acceptable it would be to them who loved the gold of the temple better than the temple that sanctified the gold. These vessels were taken away when Jeconiah was carried captive into Babylon. We have the story, and it is a melancholy one, 2 Kings xxiv. 13—15; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. All the "goodly vessels," that is, all the "vessels of gold" that were "in the house of the Lord," with all the treasures, were taken as prey, and brought to Babylon. This was grievous to them above any thing, for the temple was their pride and confidence, and the stripping of that was too plain an indication of that which the true prophet told them, that their "God was departed from them." Their false prophets therefore had no other way to make them easy than by telling them that the king of Babylon should be forced to restore them in a little while. Now Jeremiah bids them think of preserving the vessels that remained, by their prayers, rather than of bringing back those that were gone, by their prophecies. "If they be prophets," as they pretend, and if "the word of the Lord be with them"—if they have any intercourse with heaven, and any interest there, let them improve it for the stopping of the progress of the judgment, let them step into the gap, and stand with their censer "between the living and the dead," between that which was carried away and that which remains, that "the plague may be stayed; let them make intercession with the Lord of hosts," that the vessels which are left go not after the rest.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVIII. FALSE PROPHECY OF HANANIAH.—Ver. 1—4. In delivering this prophecy, Hananiah faced Jeremiah, he spake it to him, designing to confront and contradict him, as much as to say, "Jeremiah, thou liest." Now his prediction is, that the king of Babylon's power, at least his power over Judah and Jerusalem, should be speedily broken, that "within two full years" the vessels of the temple should be brought back, and Jeconiah, and all the captives that were carried away with him, should return; whereas Jeremiah had foretold that the yoke of the king of Babylon should be bound on yet faster, and that the vessels and captives should not return for 70 years. Now, upon the reading of this sham prophecy, and comparing it with the messages that God sent by the true prophets, we may observe what a vast difference there is between them. Here is nothing of the spirit and life, the majesty of style and sublimity of expression, that appear in the discourses of God's prophets, nothing of that divine flame and flatus. But that which is especially wanting here, is, an air of piety; he speaks with a great deal of confidence of the return of their prosperity, but here is not a word of good counsel given them to repent and reform, and return to God, to pray, and seek his face, that they might be prepared for the favours God had in reserve for them. He promises them temporal mercies, in God's name, but makes no mention of those spiritual mercies which God always promised should go along with them, as chap. xxiv. 7. "I will give them a heart to know me."

DEATH OF HANANIAH.—Ver. 15—17. Hananiah is sentenced to die for contradicting the true oracle, and Jeremiah; when he has received commission from God, boldly tells him so to his face; though, before he received that commission, he went away, and said nothing. 1. The crimes of which Hananiah stands convicted, are, cheating the people, and affronting God; "Thou makest this people to trust in a lie," encouraging them to hope that they shall have peace, which will make their destruction the more terrible to them when it comes; yet this was not the worst; "Thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord," thou hast taught them to despise all the good counsel given them in God's name by the true prophets, and hast rendered it ineffectual. Those have a great deal to answer for, who, by telling sinners that they shall have peace though they go on, harden their hearts in a contempt of the reproofs and admonitions of the word, and the means and methods God takes to bring them to repentance. 2. The judgment given the LORD do so: [k]the LORD perform thy words which thou hast prophesied, to bring again the vessels of the LORD's house, and all that is carried away captive, from Babylon into this place.

7 Nevertheless, hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people;

8 The prophets[4] that have been before me and before thee of old, [l]prophesied both against many countries, and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence.

9 The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, [m]then shall the prophet be known that the LORD hath truly sent him.

10 ¶ Then Hananiah the prophet [n]took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it.

11 And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, [o]Thus saith the LORD, [p]Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way.

12 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the prophet, (after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah,) saying,

13 Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD, [q]Thou hast broken the yokes of wood; but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.[5]

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [r]I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, [s]that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: [t]and I have given him the beasts of the field also.

15 ¶ Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah; [u]The LORD hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie.

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: [x]this year thou shalt die,[6] because thou hast taught [‡]rebellion against the LORD.

17 So [y]Hananiah the prophet died the same year, in the seventh month.

Jeremiah's letter to the captives in Babylon, 1. The fearful end of Ahab and Zedekiah, two lying prophets, 20.

NOW these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people, whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon,

2 (After that Jeconiah the king, and the queen,[1] and the [*]eunuchs, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem,)

3 By the hand of Elasah the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiah, (whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon,) saying,

4 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, [e]whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon;

5 Build ye houses, and dwell in them;[2] and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them;

6 [g]Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished.

7 And [i]seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and [k]pray unto the LORD for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

8 ¶ For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed.

9 For they prophesy [†]falsely unto you in my name: I have not sent them, saith the LORD.

10 For thus saith the LORD, That [n]after seventy years[3] be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place.

11 ¶ For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the LORD, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an [‡]expected end.

12 Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you.

13 And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.

14 And [t]I will be found of you, saith the LORD; [u]and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the LORD; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

15 ¶ Because ye have said, [x]The LORD hath raised us up prophets in Babylon;

16 Know that thus saith the LORD [y]of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity;

[4] It is an ordinary thing for true prophets to denounce God's judgments upon grievous sinners, such as this people is: and one ought not to suspect so much deceit in sinister predictions which cause offence, as in favourable ones that gain goodwill and applause; yet the event will show the truth. against him is, "'I will cast thee off from the face of the earth,' as unworthy to live upon it; thou shalt be buried in it; 'this year thou shalt die,' and die as a rebel against the Lord, to whom death will come with a sting and a curse." This sentence was executed. Hananiah died the same year, within two months: for his prophecy is dated the fifth month, ver. 1, and his death the seventh. Good men may perhaps be suddenly taken off by death, in the midst of their days, and in mercy to them, as Josiah was, but this being foretold, as the punishment of his sin, and coming to pass accordingly, it may safely be construed as a testimony from heaven against him, and a confirmation of Jeremiah's mission. And if the people's hearts had not been wretchedly hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, it would have prevented their being further hardened by the deceitfulness of their prophets.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIX. JEREMIAH'S LETTER TO THE CAPTIVES IN BABYLON.—Ver. 4. A copy of a letter at large follows here to ver. 24. In these verses, 1. He assures them that he wrote in the name of the "Lord of hosts the God of Israel," who indited the letter; Jeremiah was but the scribe or amanuensis. 2. God by him owns the hand he had in their captivity; "I have caused you to be carried away," ver 4; and again, ver 7. All the force of the king of Babylon could not have done it, if God had not ordered it; nor could he have any power against them, but what was given him from above. If God caused them to be carried captives, they might be sure that he neither did them any wrong, nor meant them any hurt. Note, It will help very much to reconcile us to our troubles, and to make us patient under them, to consider that they are what God has appointed us to; "I opened not my mouth because thou didst it." 3. He bids them think of nothing but settling there; and therefore let them resolve to make the best of it, ver. 5, 6. "Build ye houses, and dwell in them," &c. By all this it is intimated to them, That they must not feed themselves with hopes of a speedy return out of their captivity, for that would keep them still "unsettled," and, consequently, uneasy; they would apply themselves to no business, take no comfort, but be always tiring themselves, and provoking their conquerors, with the expectations of relief; and their disappointment at last would sink them into despair, and make their condition much more miserable than otherwise it would be; let them therefore count upon a continuance there, and accommodate themselves to it as well as they can. Let them "build," and "plant," and "marry," and dispose of their children there, as if they were at home in their own land; let them take a pleasure in seeing their families built up and multiplied, for though they must expect themselves to die in captivity, yet their children may live to see better days. 4. He directs them to seek the good of the country where they were captives, ver. 7, to "pray" for it, to endeavour it. This forbids them to attempt any thing against the public peace, while they were subjects to the king of Babylon; though he was an heathen, an idolater, an oppressor, and an enemy to God and his church, yet, while he gave them protection, they must pay him their allegiance; and live "quiet and peaceable lives" under him, "in all godliness and honesty:" not plotting to shake off his yoke, but patiently leaving it to God in due time to work deliverance for them. Nay, they must pray to God for the peace of the place where they were, that they might oblige them to continue their kindness to them, and disprove the character that had been given their nation, that they were "hurtful to kings and provinces," and "moved sedition," Ezra iv. 15. Both the wisdom of the serpent, and the innocency of the dove, required them to be true to the government they lived under; "for in the peace thereof ye shall have peace;" should the country be embroiled in war, they would have the greatest share in the calamitous effects of it. Thus the primitive Christians, according to the temper of their holy religion, prayed for the powers that were, though they were persecuting powers. And if they were to pray for, and seek the peace of, the land of their captivity, much more reason have we to pray for the welfare of the land of our nativity, where we are a free people under a good government, "that in the peace thereof" we and ours "may have peace." Every passenger is concerned in the safety of the ship.—Henry.

VAIN EXPECTATIONS.—Ver. 4—7. The vain expectation of a speedy return to their own land, which the false prophets excited in the Jews at Babylon, led them to neglect their own interests and comfort, and the good of the nation; and tended to betray them into measures that would excite the jealousy of the victors, and increase their own miseries. But the prophet, in the name of God, directed them to consider Babylon as their home, and to take the best care they could of themselves, their families and the nation; to use their influence and endeavours to promote the public peace; and to pray for the welfare of the city, as the way to obtain peace to themselves. These directions tended to render them patient and contented, industrious and useful, and as comfortable as their situation would admit of. This deportment, and their constant prayers in all their religious assemblies, for the welfare of the community, would tend to conciliate the rulers. Most of them must end their lives at Babylon, and share the calamities and many of the advantages of that city, all their days; and their posterity must do the same, till the expiration of the appointed period. It was therefore both reasonable and prudent to pray that there might be peace in that place where the Lord hath assigned them their habitations; and as far as they believed his word they would do it.—The Lord had caused them to be carried captive, or all the power of the Chaldeans could 17 Thus saith the LORD of hosts,[5] Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will [s]make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

18 And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, [s]and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, [s]to be a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them:

19 Because [b]they have not hearkened to my words, saith the LORD, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them; but ye would not hear, saith the LORD.

20 ¶ Hear ye therefore the word of the LORD, all ye of the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon;

21 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, which prophesy a lie unto you in my name, Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall slay them before your eyes:

22 And of them [s]shall be taken up a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, The LORD make thee like Zedekiah, and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon [f]roasted in the fire;[6]

23 Because they have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives,[7] and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; [h]even I know, and am a witness, saith the LORD.

24 ¶ Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaiah the [i]Nehelamite, saying,

25 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, [i]Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to [k]Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, and to all the priests, saying,

26 The LORD hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be [l]officers in the house of the LORD, for every man that is mad, [n]and maketh himself a prophet,[8] [o]that thou shouldest put him in prison, and in the stocks.

27 Now [p]therefore why hast thou not reproved Jeremiah of Anathoth, [q]which maketh himself a prophet to you?

28 For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, [r]This captivity is long: build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

29 And [s]Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet.

A. M. cir. 3408.—B. C. cir. 596.

[5] In this paragraph, the prophet shows that both prince and people were to be given up to every kind of calamity, for their continued disobedience to the Divine admonitions. This is mentioned to induce the captives to adopt the measures, and follow the advice given in the former part of the letter.—BOOTHROYD.

CHAP. XXX.

The return of the Jews, 1. Jacob comforted, 10. Their return shall be gracious, 18.

THE [a]word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book.

3 For, lo, the days come,[1] saith the LORD, [d]that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the LORD; [e]and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.

4 ¶ And these are the words that the LORD spake concerning Israel, and concerning Judah.

5 For thus saith the LORD, We have heard a voice of trembling, [*]of fear, and not of peace.

6 Ask ye now, and see whether [†]a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness?

7 Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: [f]it is even the time of Jacob's trouble: [m]but he shall be saved out of it.

8 For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, that [n]I will break this yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him:

9 But they shall [p]serve the LORD their God, and David their king,[2] [o]whom I will raise up unto them.

10 ¶ Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the LORD; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, [r]I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, [s]and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.

11 For I [t]am with thee, saith the LORD, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee;[3] but I will not have effected it; and his will ought to be submitted to in this dispensation. "It is the duty of all private persons, to submit to the government that protects them, and to pray for the prosperity of it. And if they are persecutors or enemies to the truth, they are to leave it to God to execute on them the judgments he has denounced against tyrants and oppressors; which threatenings the Jews expected God would execute upon Babylon in due time." Ps. cxxxvii. 8, 9. [Lowth.]—To pray for the peace of a city or country, and for the health or eternal salvation of the rulers, is very different from wishing success to their ambitious, rapacious, or sanguinary undertakings; though this distinction is not always attended to.—May not the surprising change, which took place in the character of Nebuchadnezzar, be considered as an answer to the pious Jews for him; as the conversion of Saul was to the prayers of the Christians for their persecutors? And may not even they, who live under the most oppressive persecutors, take an encouraging hint from this consideration, as to their duty in such circumstances.—Scott.

SHEMAIAH.—Ver. 24. This busy fellow is called "Shemaiah the Nehelamite;" the dreamer, (so the margin reads it,) because all his prophecies he pretended to have received from God in a dream. He had got a copy of Jeremiah's letter to the captives, or had heard it read, or information was given to him concerning it, and it nettled him exceedingly; and he will take pen in hand, and answer it, yea that he will. But how? He does not write to Jeremiah in justification of his own mission, nor offer any rational arguments for the support of his prophecies concerning the speedy return of the captives; but he writes to the priests, those faithful patrons of the false prophets, and instructs them to persecute Jeremiah. He writes in his own name, not so much as pretending to have the people's consent to it, but, as if he must be dictator to all mankind, he sends a circular letter (as it should seem) among the priests at Jerusalem, and the rest of the people, probably by the same messengers that brought the letter from Jeremiah. But it is chiefly directed to Zephaniah, who was either the immediate son of Maaseiah, or of the twenty-fourth course of the priests, of which Maaseiah was the father and head. He was not the high priest, but sagan or suffragan to the high priest, or in some other considerable post of command in the temple, as Pashur, chap. xx. 1. Perhaps he was chairman of that committee of priests that was appointed in a particular manner to take cognizance of those that pretended to be prophets, of which there were very many at this time, and to give judgment concerning them.—Henry.

CHAP. XXX. MERCY AFTER JUDGMENT.—Ver. 5—9. The Lord here introduces further assurances of merciful deliverance, by speaking of the approaching miseries of the Jews as already come upon them. They had disregarded the predictions of these calamities: but they are here represented as hearing a voice of trembling and fear, and not of peace; and the dismay and distress would be so general and extreme, that every man in Jerusalem would be seen in anguish, resembling that of a woman in travail; and all would be enfeebled, pale, and fainting. Indeed this would be a day of so great affliction, that none had ever been like it; and it might emphatically be called the day of Jacob's trouble; but it would as certainly precede their deliverance, as the pangs of travail do the joy of the mother "that a child is born into the world;" and the nation would certainly survive, and be saved out of these distresses. In that day, (namely, the day of their deliverance,) the Chaldean yoke would be broken from off them, and they would be rescued from the oppression of strangers; and being weaned from their idolatry, they would adhere to the worship and service of God, and live under the rulers whom he would place over them, of the lineage of David, or favoured like David.—Doubtless this looks forward to the days of Christ, the Son of David, and sometimes called David, or the Beloved, whose coming was introduced by that dispensation which commenced with the deliverance of the Jews from captivity.

GREAT COMPASSION.—Ver. 12—18. The Lord here speaks of the condition of the Jewish nation, in the extremity of their distresses, as it appeared to them and to others, and as it would have been without his immediate interposition. Their bruises were incurable by any human power, they had been so grievously wounded. None had skill to effect a cure, or to bind up their wounds, nor had they any healing medicines. None could intercede for them with the victors, to restore them to their land, or to show them favour; nor had they any means of recovering liberty, and re-establishing their church and state, or even of rendering their bondage more gentle. All the nations, whose alliance they had courted, whose idolatries they had copied, and who professed great love to them, had forgotten them, and desired no further acquaintance with them. JEHOVAH himself seemed to fight against them as an enemy: his chastisement was very severe, and like that of a cruel one; for he had been provoked to it by their multiplied iniquities. It was therefore in vain for them to lament their miseries, or complain of hard usage; their sorrow was incurable by any other hand than that which had inflicted it; and in order to obtain that, they must submit to him, and acknowledge his justice in their punishment. Nevertheless, though they suffered justly, and could not help themselves, yet he intended to appear for them, and to retaliate on those who had devoured them and carried them captive; he would bind up and heal the wounds, of which the nation lay as it were expiring.

PREDICTION OF FUTURE BLESSING.—Ver. 19—22. After the captivity, the Jews should have abundant cause for joy and thanksgiving: for the Lord promised that he would correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous.

13 There is none to plead thy cause, ‡that thou mayest be bound up: [a]thou hast no healing medicines.

14 All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they seek thee not: for [c]I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; [d]because thy sins were increased.

15 [e]Why criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable [g]for the multitude of thine iniquity: because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee.

16 Therefore[4] all they that devour thee shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey.

17 For [i]I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the LORD: because they called thee an Outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.

18 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, [l]Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and [m]the city shall be builded upon her own [§]heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof.

19 And [o]out of them shall proceed thanksgiving, and the voice of them that make merry: [p]and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; [q]I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

20 Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, [s]and I will punish all that oppress them.

21 And [t]their nobles shall be of themselves,[5] and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the LORD.

22 And [y]ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

23 ¶ Behold, the whirlwind of the LORD goeth forth with fury, a ‖continuing whirlwind; it shall *fall with pain upon the head of the wicked.

24 The fierce anger of the LORD shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it.

CHAP. XXXI.

The restoration of Israel, 1. Christ is promised, 22. His care over the church, 27.

A. M. cir. 3410 —B. C. cir. 594.

AT the same time, saith the LORD, [b]will I be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people.

2 Thus saith the LORD, The people which were left of the sword *found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest.

3 The LORD hath appeared *of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee [b]with an everlasting love; therefore †with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.

4 Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy ‡tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

5 Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains[1] of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall [§]eat them as common things.

6 For there shall be a day, that the watchmen [q]upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, [r]Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the LORD our God.

7 For thus saith the LORD, Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, [t]O LORD, save thy people, [u]the remnant of Israel.

8 Behold, [x]I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither.

9 They shall come with weeping, and with †supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters [c]in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; [d]for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.

10 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, [f]He that scattereth Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.

11 For the LORD hath [h]redeemed Jacob, and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he.

12 Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, [l]and shall flow together to the goodness of the LORD, for wheat, and for wine,[2] and for oil, and for the young of the flock and of the herd; [n]and their soul shall be as a watered garden: [o]and they shall not sorrow any more at all.

13 Then shall the virgin rejoice in the dance, both young men and old together: for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow.

exceedingly multiply and prosper them: their posterity should be taken care of, as the children of the covenant, in the same manner as they had been in former ages; the whole nation should be established as his congregation; and their oppressors should be severely punished. They would also be governed by magistrates of their own nation, and not of the Gentiles as during the captivity: and even their chief governor would be raised up from among themselves: the Lord would cause him to draw near unto him, to inquire his will, and present his appointed worship; for who (except thus taught, and drawn of God) had ever engaged his heart to approach unto the Lord? Thus they would become the Lord's people, and he would again be known as their God.—This prophecy was accomplished in some measure, by the increase and prosperity of the Jews in their own land, under the government of several rulers of their own nation who for a long time were the high priests, that by office drew near before God, even into the most holy place, as the typical intercessors for the people whom they governed. Yet the Jews were seldom, if ever, free from dependence on strangers, and were frequently oppressed by them after the captivity; and many of their rulers were far from meriting the character here given. But when Christ arose, and was advanced to the mediatorial throne, as High Priest and King in one person, and in this character drew near before God, in behalf of his people, having engaged his heart to pass through all his previous sufferings as their all-atoning sacrifice; this prediction had its full accomplishment. And who is this that engages his heart to undertake so arduous a service? Who is this that ventures to intercede for sinners before a just and holy God? is he not the Son of God and the Lord of glory, in whom the Father is well pleased, and whom all the angels of God worship? And through him, all that believe, become the people of God, and he becomes their portion and salvation.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXI. Recovery of the Jews.—Ver. 8, 9. 1. Though they are scattered to places far remote, yet they shall be brought together "from the north country, and from the coasts of the earth;" wherever they are, God will find them out. 2. Though many of them are very unfit for travel, yet that shall be no hinderance to them; "the blind and the lame" shall come; such a good-will shall they have to their journey, and such a good heart upon it, that they shall not make their blindness and lameness an excuse for staying where they are. Their companions will be ready to help them, will be "eyes to the blind, and legs to the lame," as good Christians ought to be to one another in their travels heavenward, Job xxix. 15. But, above all, their God will help them; and let none plead that he is blind, who has God for his Guide; or lame, who has God for his Strength. "The women with child" are heavy, and it is not fit that they should undertake such a journey, much less those "that travail with child;" and yet, when it is to return to Zion, neither the one nor the other shall make any difficulty of it. Note, When God calls, we must not plead any inability to come; for he that calls us will help us, will strengthen us. 3. Though they seem to be diminished, and to become few in numbers, yet, when they come altogether, they shall be "a great company;" and so will God's spiritual Israel be, when there shall be a general rendezvous of them, though now they are but a little flock. 4. Though their return will be matter of joy to them, yet prayers and tears will be both their stores and their artillery; ver. 9, "They shall come with weeping, and with supplications;" weeping for sin, supplication for pardon; for "the goodness of God" shall "lead them to repentance;" and they shall weep with more bitterness and more tenderness for sin, when they are delivered out of their captivity, than ever they did when they were groaning under it. Weeping and praying do well together; tears put life into prayers, and express the liveliness of them, and prayers help to "wipe away tears." "With favours will I lead them;" (so the margin reads it;) in their journey they shall be compassed with God's favours, the fruits of his favour. 5. Though they have a perilous journey, yet they shall be safe under a divine convoy. Is the country they pass through dry and thirsty? "I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters," not the waters of a land-flood which fail in summer. Is it a wilderness where there is no road, no track? "I will cause them to walk in a straight way," which they shall not miss. Is it a rough and rocky country? Yet "they shall not stumble." Note, Whithersoever God gives his people a clear call, he will either find them, or make them, a ready way; and while we are following Providence, we may be sure that Providence will not be wanting to us. And, lastly, here is a reason given why God will take all this care of his people; "for I am a Father to Israel," a father that begat him, and therefore will maintain him, that have the care and compassion of a father for him; Ps. cxiii. 13, "and Ephraim is my first-born," even Ephraim, who, having gone astray from God, was "no more worthy to be called a son," shall yet be owned as a first-born, particularly dear, and heir of a double portion of blessings.—Henry.

Rachel Weeping.—Ver. 15—17. Rachel was mother to Joseph and Benjamin; from the former descended a large proportion of the kingdom of Israel; and from the other, numbers of the inhabitants of Jerusalem. The desolations of Israel and Judah made vast havock amongst her descendants. The sepulchre of Rachel was betwixt Ramah and Bethlehem; and she is here poetically introduced as weeping for her children with bitter and inconsolable lamentation, as if her posterity had been utterly extirpated.—It will hereafter be considered in what sense the murder of the 14 And I will [r]satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and [s]my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the LORD.

15 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, A voice was heard in Ramah,[3] lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children, [x]refused to be comforted for her children, [y]because they were not.

16 Thus saith the LORD, [z]Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: [a]for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the LORD; [b]and they shall come again from the land of the enemy.

17 And [c]there is hope in thine end, saith the LORD, that thy children shall come again to their own border.

18 ¶ I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself thus; [f]Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke: [h]turn thou me, and I shall be turned; [i]for thou art the LORD my God.

19 Surely, [k]after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, [l]I smote upon my thigh: [4] I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth.

20 Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? [p]for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels are [‡]troubled for him: [q]I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the LORD.

21 Set thee up way-marks, make thee high heaps: set thine heart toward the highway, even the way which thou wentest: [t]turn again, O virgin of Israel, turn again to these thy cities.

22 ¶ How long wilt thou go about, O thou [x]backsliding daughter? for the LORD hath [y]created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man.[5]

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah, and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity, The LORD bless thee, O habitation of justice, [b]and mountain of holiness.

24 And there shall dwell [c]in Judah itself, and in all the cities thereof together, husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks.

25 For I have satiated the weary soul, and I have replenished every sorrowful soul.

26 Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me.

27 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, [f]that I will sow the house of Israel, and the house of Judah, with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast.

28 And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; [l]so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the LORD.

29 In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

30 But [l]every one shall die for his own iniquity: and every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.

31 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that [n]I will make a new covenant[6] with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah;

32 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; (which my covenant they brake, [§]although I was an husband unto them, saith the LORD;)

33 But [s]this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the LORD, [t]I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; [u]and will be their God, and they shall be my people.

34 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, [y]Know the LORD: [z]for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the LORD: [a]for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

35 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; [e]The LORD of hosts is his name:

36 If [f]those ordinances depart from before me,[7] saith the LORD, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever.

37 Thus saith the LORD, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, [h]I will also cast off all the seed of Israel, for all that they have done, saith the LORD.

38 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, [i]that the city shall be built to the LORD, from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.

39 And the measuring-line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath.[8] children in the coasts of Bethlehem accomplished this prediction. To carry on the allusion, the Lord here addresses her, and calls on her to refrain from weeping, for her labour in bringing up her children should not be lost, or be without recompense; as those that were left and scattered among their enemies, would come again to their own land; and she might hope for great blessings for them in the latter days.—Scott.

40 And the [n]whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse gate toward the east, [q]shall be holy unto the LORD; [r]it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down, any more for ever.

RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.—Ver. 20. God had compassion on Ephraim. 1. He owns him for a child, though he has been an undutiful child, and a prodigal; "Is Ephraim my dear son? Is he a pleasant child?" Thus when Ephraim bemoans himself, God bemoans him, as "one whom his mother comforts," though she had chidden him, Isa. lxvi. 13. "Is" this "Ephraim my dear son?" "Is" this that "pleasant child?" Is it he that is thus sad in spirit, and that complains so bitterly? So it is like that of Saul, 1 Sam. xxvi. 17. "Is this thy voice, my son David?" Or, as it is sometimes supplied, "Is not Ephraim my dear son? Is he not a pleasant child?" Yes, now he is, now he repents and returns. Note, Those that have been undutiful, backsliding children, if they sincerely return and repent, however they have been under the chastisement of the rod, shall be accepted of God as "dear" and "pleasant children." Ephraim had afflicted himself, but God thus heals him: and abased himself, but God thus honours him; as the returning prodigal who thought himself no more worthy to be "called a son," yet, by his father, had the "best robe" put upon him, and "a ring on his hand." 2. He relents toward him, and speaks of him with a great deal of tender compassion; "Since I spake against him," by the threatenings of the word and the rebukes of providence, "I do earnestly remember him still," my thoughts toward him are thoughts of peace. Note, When God afflicts his people, yet he does not forget them; when he casts them out of their land, yet he does not cast them out of sight, nor out of mind. Even then when God is speaking against us, yet he is acting for us, and designing our good in all; and this is our comfort in our affliction, that the Lord thinks upon us, though we have forgotten him. "I remember him still," and therefore "my bowels are troubled for him," as Joseph's yearned toward his brethren, even then when he "spake roughly" to them.—Henry.

THE NEW THING IN THE EARTH.—Ver. 21—22. The dispersed Jews and Israelites are here called on to return without delay to their deserted cities, and to set up waymarks, or throw up heaps to direct inquirers in the road. Let them heartily attempt to go back to their own land, by the way in which they had gone from it, and no longer wander about as they had done; like a woman who had improperly left her father's house, and was afraid and ashamed, or reluctant to return. To encourage them to this, the Lord assures them, that "he had created," or would create, "a new thing in the earth." It would be a new thing, altogether unprecedented and worthy to be called a creation: for "A woman should compass a man," or a mighty one, a great deliverer. Now, what can this more properly mean, than that a virgin, continuing so, should conceive and compass in her womb, and bear a son, who would be "that seed of the woman," who was appointed to "bruise the serpent's head: even EMMANUEL, God with us?" This was effected by the immediate power of God, contrary to the established course of nature; it was a new thing, both as to his miraculous conception and his mysterious person; and it was adduced with great propriety for the encouragement of the Jews to return to that land, where this promised deliverer was to arise.—"As it is a new thing, and unheard of, that a woman should court a man; so God will bring as strange a thing to pass, that the Jewish nation shall return to God their husband.—So most of the modern Jews, and some of the Christian expositors understand the words; a woman, that is, the most feeble, despicable persons, compared elsewhere to women, should discomfit a mighty warrior." [Lowth.] These are the most plausible interpretations given of the passage; by those who reject that which is stated above. But the narrative of Potiphar's wife, and that of Jael and Sisera, and very many others, suffice to show, that neither of these were new things on earth; and surely the solemnity of the introduction, and the term create, appear, on either interpretation, to have little propriety or meaning.—"One that is only a woman, and not a wife, namely a virgin, shall conceive in her womb a man-child, Rev. xii. 5. This is truly a new thing, never before related or heard of; without which, satisfaction could not be obtained by the weary soul, nor the new covenant established."—Scott.

CHAP. XXXII. SALE OF THE FIELD.—Ver. 6—15. The prophet was assured that the the city and temple would soon be levelled with the ground; and all the rest of the land was at that time in the possession of the Chaldeans; yet the Lord made it known to him, that his cousin would come to him to sell him a field; and as he was the next in succession, to whom the right of redemption belonged, he commanded him to purchase it. Accordingly Hanameel came on this business. During the famine that prevailed in the city, he probably wanted money to buy bread, and his field would not be thought of much value in such circumstances; which may account for the stipulated sum being so small, for probably it was no more than forty shillings. It does not concern us to inquire, whether this land were a part of the possessions of the priests, in the suburbs of Anathoth, or some other small estate in the neighbourhood, that had come into the family; for the thing signified, not the sign, was chiefly to be noticed. The prophet

Jeremiah's imprisonment, 1; his complaint to God, 16. The captivity confirmed, 26. A promise of a gracious return, 36.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD [a]in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was [b]the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar.

2 For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem: and [c]Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house.

3 For [d]Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, [e]Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the LORD, [f]Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it;

4 And [g]Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes;

5 And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be [h]until I visit him,[1] saith the LORD: [i]though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper?

6 ¶ And Jeremiah said, The word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

7 Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum, thine uncle, shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in [k]Anathoth: [l]for the right of redemption is thine to buy it.[2]

8 So Hanameel, mine uncle's son, came to me [m]in the court of the prison, according to the word of the LORD, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. [n]Then I knew that this was the word of the LORD.

9 And I bought the field of Hanameel, my uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, and weighed him the money, even *seventeen shekels of silver.

10 And I [†]subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, [o]and weighed him the money in the balances.

11 So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed [p]according to the law and custom, and that which was open:[3]

12 And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto [q]Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel, mine uncle's son, [r]and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison.

13 ¶ And I charged Baruch before them, saying,

14 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, (both which is sealed,) and this evidence which is open, and put them in an earthen vessel,[4] that they may continue many days:

15 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [s]Houses, and fields, and vineyards, shall be possessed again in this land.

16 Now, when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, [t]I prayed unto the LORD, saying,

17 Ah Lord GOD! behold, [x]thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched-out arm, and [y]there is nothing ‡too hard for thee;

18 Thou shewest loving-kindness unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: [a]the great, the mighty God, [b]the LORD of hosts, is his name;

19 Great in counsel, and mighty in §work: [d](for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men: [e]to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings:)

20 Which hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men; [g]and hast made thee a name, as at this day;

21 And hast [h]brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt with signs, and with wonders, and [i]with a strong hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with great terror;

22 And hast given them this land, [k]which thou didst swear to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey;

23 And they came in, and possessed it; [n]but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law: they have done nothing of all that thou commandedst them to do; [o]therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them.

24 Behold the ||mounts, they are come unto the city to take it; and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and [r]what thou hast spoken is come to pass; and, behold, thou seest it.

25 And thou hast said unto me, O Lord GOD, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; *for the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

27 Behold, I am the LORD, the God of all flesh: [t]is there any thing too hard for me?[5]

28 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the himself was not likely to have any advantage from the field, nor any relation that was nearer to him than Hanameel himself; and it might be very inconvenient to him to part even with so small a sum, in his difficult circumstances; but he knew it was the word of the LORD, and implicitly obeyed it. By remaining unmarried, he assured the people, that he was satisfied of the truth of his predictions respecting the captivity; and by thus buying the field, he proved the same as to his predictions of their restoration.—The transaction being settled, according to the law and custom of the time, with great punctuality, would give it notoriety; and his orders to his companion Baruch to put the deeds into an earthen vessel, (an apt emblem of the precariousness of such possessions,) and to secure them in some place where they might be found at the end of many days, would cause the annexed reason to be the more noticed and remembered. —Scott.

GREATNESS AND GOODNESS OF GOD.—Ver. 17. Let us consider, as Jeremiah does here, 1. That God is the Fountain of all being, power, life, motion, and perfection; He "made the heaven and the earth with his outstretched arm;" and therefore who can control him? Who dares contend with him? 2. That with him nothing is impossible, no difficulty insuperable; "nothing is too hard for thee." When human skill and power are quite nonplussed, "with God are strength and wisdom" sufficient to master all the opposition. 3. That he is a God of boundless, bottomless mercy; that is his darling attribute; it is his goodness that is his glory; "Thou not only art kind, but thou 'showest loving kindness,' not to a few, to here and there one, but to thousands, thousands of persons, thousands of generations." 4. That he is a God of impartial and inflexible justice. His reprieves are not pardons, but if in mercy he spares the parents, that they may be led to repentance, yet such a hatred has he to sin, and such a displeasure against sinners, that he "recompenses their iniquity into the bosom of their children," and yet does them no wrong: so hateful is the unrighteousness of man, and so jealous of its own honour is the righteousness of God. 5. That he is a God of universal dominion and command. He is "the great God," for he is the "mighty God;" and might among men makes them great. He is "the Lord of hosts," of all hosts, that is his name, and he answers to his name, for all the hosts of heaven and earth, of men and angels, are at his beck. 6. That he contrives every thing for the best, and effects every thing as he contrived it. He is "great in counsel:" so vast are the reaches, and so deep are the designs, of his wisdom; and he is "mighty in doing," according to the counsel of his will. Now such a God as this is not to be quarrelled with. His service is to be constantly adhered to, and all his disposals cheerfully acquiesced to.

THE PROVOCATIONS OF ISRAEL.—Ver. 30—35. God here assigns the reason for his severe proceedings against the city that had been so much in his favour. It is sin, it is that, and nothing else, that ruins it. 1. They were impudent and daring in sin. They "offered incense to Baal," not in corners, as men ashamed or afraid of being discovered, but upon the "tops of their houses," ver. 29, in defiance of God's justice. 2. They designed an affront to God herein. They did it "to provoke me to anger," ver. 29. "They have only provoked me to anger with the works of their hands," ver. 30. They could not promise themselves any pleasure, profit, or honour out of it, but did it on purpose to offend God. And again, ver. 32, "All the evil which they have done was to provoke me to anger." They knew he was a jealous God in the matters of his worship, and there they resolved to try his jealousy, and dare him to his face. Jerusalem has been "to me a provocation of my anger and fury," ver. 31. Their conduct in every thing was provoking. 3. They began betimes, and had continued all along provoking to God. They have "done evil before me from their youth," ever since they were first formed into a people, ver. 30; witness their murmurings and rebellions in the wilderness. And as for Jerusalem, though it was the "holy city," it has been "a provocation" to the holy God "from the day that they built it, even to this day," ver. 31. O what reason have we to lament the little honour God has from this world, and the great dishonour done him, when even in Judah, where "he is known," and "his name is great," and in Salem, where his "tabernacle is," there was always that found, that was a provocation to him! 4. All orders and degrees of men contributed to the common guilt, and therefore were justly involved in the common ruin. Not only the "children of Israel," that had revolted from the temple, but the "children of Judah" too, that still adhered to it. Not only the common people, the "men of Judah" and "inhabitants of Jerusalem," but those that should have reproved and restrained sin in others, were themselves ringleaders in it, their kings and princes, priests and prophets. 5. God had again and again called them to repentance, but they turned a deaf ear to his calls, and rudely turned their back on him that called them, though he was their Master, to whom they were bound in duty, and their Benefactor, to whom they were bound in gratitude and interest, ver. 33. "'I taught them' better manners with as much care as ever any tender parent taught a child, 'rising up early, in teaching them,' studying to adapt the teaching to their capacities, taking them betimes, when they might have been most pliable, but all in vain; they 'turned not the face to me,' would not so much as look upon me, nay, they 'turned the back upon me;'" an expression of the highest contempt; "as he called them," like froward children, "so they went from him," Hos. xi. 2. "They have not hearkened to receive instruction," they regarded not a word that was said to them, though it was designed for their own good. 6. There was in their idolatries an impious contempt of God, Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall take it.

29 And the Chaldeans, that fight against this city, shall come and [x]set fire on this city, and burn it with the houses [y]upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink-offerings unto other gods, to provoke me to anger.

30 For the children of Israel, and the children of Judah, have only done evil before me from their youth: for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the LORD.

31 For [a]this city hath been to me as [†]a provocation of mine anger and of my fury, from the day that they built it even unto this day, [b]that I should remove it from before my face;

32 Because of all the evil of the children of Israel, and of the children of Judah, which they have done to provoke me to anger, [c]they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

33 And they have [d]turned unto me the [‡]back, and not the face: though I taught them, rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction.

34 But they [f]set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to defile it.

35 And [g]they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech, [6] [h]which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, [i]to cause Judah to sin.

36 ¶ And now therefore thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say, [i]It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence;

37 Behold, [m]I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, [n]and I will cause them to dwell safely;

38 And [o]they shall be my people, and I will be their God:

39 And I will give them one heart, and one way, [7] [q]that they may fear me [§]for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them:

40 And [s]I will make an everlasting covenant with them, [t]that I will not turn away [l]from them, to do them good; [u]but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me.

To confirm this interpretation they observe, that the Hebrew verb used in the text signifies to dedicate or consecrate (see Exodus xiii. 12).—LOWTH.

CHAP. XXXIII.

A return from captivity is promised, 1. Christ the Branch of righteousness, 15.

MOREOVER, the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the second time, (while [a]he was yet shut up in the court of the prison,) saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, the maker thereof, [1] the LORD that formed it, to establish it; [*]The LORD is his name;

3 [e]Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and [d]shew thee great and [†]mighty things, which thou knowest not.

4 For thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, which are thrown down by the mounts, and by the sword; [2]

5 They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger, and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness [g]I have hid my face from this city.

6 Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, [i]and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth.

7 And I [k]will cause the captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Israel, to return, [l]and will build them, as at the first.

8 And [m]I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.

9 And it shall be to me [n]a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall [o]fear and tremble for all the goodness, and for all the prosperity, that I procure unto it.

for, ver. 34, "They set their abominations," their idols, which they knew to be in the highest degree abominable to God, they set them "in the house which is called by my name to defile it." They had their idols not only in their high places and groves, but even in God's temple. 7. They were guilty of the most unnatural cruelty to their own children, for they "sacrificed them to Moloch," ver. 35. Thus, because they "liked not to retain God in their knowledge," but "changed his glory" into shame, they were justly given up to vile affections, and stript of natural ones, and their glory was turned into shame. And, lastly, What was the consequence of all this? (1.) They "caused Judah to sin," ver. 35. The whole country was infected with the contagious idolatries and iniquities of Jerusalem. (2.) They brought ruin upon themselves. It was as if they had done it on purpose that God "should remove them from before his face," ver. 31, they would throw themselves out of his favour.

PROMISED BLESSING.—Ver. 39. 1. God here promises to give them "one heart and one way." In order to their walking in "one way," he will give them "one heart:" as the heart is, so will the way be, and both shall be one; that is, First, They shall be each of them one with themselves; "one heart" is the same with a "new heart," Ezek. xi. 19. The heart is then one, when it is fully determined for God, and entirely devoted to God; when the eye is single, and God's glory alone aimed at; when our hearts are fixed, trusting in God, and we are uniform and universal in our obedience to him, then the heart is one, and the way one; and unless the heart is thus steady, the goings will not be steadfast. From this promise we may take direction and encouragement to pray, with David, Ps. lxxxvi. 11. "Unite my heart to fear thy name;" for God says, "I will give them one heart, that they may fear me." Secondly, They shall be all of them one with each other. All good Christians shall be incorporated into one body, Jews and Gentiles shall become "one sheep-fold;" and they shall all, as far as they are sanctified, have a disposition to love one another; the gospel they profess, having in it the strongest inducements to mutual love, and the Spirit that dwells in them, being the Spirit of love. Though they may have different apprehensions about lesser things, they shall be all one in the great things of God, being renewed after the same image: though they may have many paths, they have but "one way," that of serious godliness.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIII. PEACE AND TRUTH.—Ver. 6. "'I (Jehovah) will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth;' I will give it them in due time, and give them an encouraging prospect of it in the mean time." Peace stands here for all good; "peace and truth" are peace according to the promise, and in pursuance of that: or "peace and truth" are peace and the true religion; peace and the true worship of God, in opposition to the many falsehoods and deceits by which they had been led away from God. We may apply it more generally, and observe, 1. That peace and truth are the great subject-matter of divine revelation. These promises here lead us to the gospel of Christ, and in that God has revealed to us "peace and truth," the method of true peace; truth to direct us, peace to make us easy. "Grace and truth," and abundance of both, "come by Jesus Christ." Peace and truth are the life of the soul, and Christ "came that we might have" that "life, and might have it more abundantly." Christ rules by the power of truth, John xviii. 17, and by it he gives "abundance of peace," Ps. lxxii. 7; lxxxv. 10. 2. That the divine revelation of peace and truth brings health and cure to all those that by faith receive it; it heals the soul of the diseases it has contracted, as it is a means of sanctification, John xvii. 17. "He sent his word and healed them." And it puts the soul into good order, and keeps it in frame, and fit for the employments and enjoyments of the spiritual and divine life.

SPIRITUAL JOY.—Ver. 11. 1. There shall be "common" joy there, "the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride;" marriages shall again be celebrated, as formerly, with songs, which in Babylon they had laid aside, for their harps were hung on the willow-trees. 2. There shall be "religious" joy there; temple-songs shall be revived, "the Lord's songs," which they could not "sing in a strange land." There shall be heard in their private houses, and in the cities of Judah, as well as in the temple, "the voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts." Note, Nothing is more the praise and honour of a people than to have God praised and honoured among them. This shall complete the mercy of their return and restoration, that with it they shall have hearts to be thankful for it, and give God the glory of it, the glory both of the power and of the goodness by which it is affected; they shall praise him both as "the Lord of hosts," and as the God who "is good," and whose "mercy endures for ever." This, though a song of old, yet, being sung upon this fresh occasion, will be a new song. We find this literally fulfilled at their return out of Babylon, Ezra iii. 11. They sang together in praising the Lord, "because he is good, for his mercy endures for ever." The public worship of God shall be diligently and constantly attended upon; "They shall bring the sacrifice of praise to the house of the Lord." All the sacrifices were intended for the praise of God, but this seems to be meant of the spiritual sacrifices of humble adorations and joyful thanksgivings, "the calves of our lips," Hos. xiv. 2, which "shall please the Lord better than an ox or a bullock." The Jews say, that in the days of the Messiah all sacrifices shall cease but "the sacrifices of praise," and to those days this promise has a further reference. It is promised that the country, which had lain long depopulated, should be replenished and stocked again. It was now desolate, "without man and without beast;"

10 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, Again there shall be heard in this place, [p]which ye say shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate, without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast, 11 The [q]voice of joy, and the voice of gladness; the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; the voice of them that shall say, Praise the LORD of hosts: for the LORD is good; for his mercy endureth for ever:[3] and of them that shall bring [t]the sacrifice of praise into the house of the LORD. [u]For I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first, saith the LORD.

12 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Again in this place, which is desolate without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall be an habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down.

13 In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, [x]shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them,[4] saith the LORD.

14 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah.

15 ¶ In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; [d]and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land.

16 In those days [e]shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, [‡]The LORD our Righteousness.

17 ¶ For thus saith the LORD, [§]David shall [f]never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel;[5]

18 Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt-offerings, and to kindle meat-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually.

19 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, saying,

20 Thus saith the LORD, [h]If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season;

21 Then [i]may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, [k]that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers.

22 As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David[6] my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Jeremiah prophesieth the destruction of Jerusalem, and the captivity of Zedekiah.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, ([a]when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and all his army, and [b]all the kingdoms of the earth [*]of his dominion, and all the people, [c]fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities thereof,) saying,

2 [1]Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel,[1] Go and speak to Zedekiah king of Judah, and tell him; Thus saith the LORD, [d]Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire:

3 And [e]thou shalt not escape out of his hand, but shalt surely be taken, and delivered into his hand; [f]and thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and [†]he shall speak with thee mouth to mouth, and thou shalt go to Babylon.

4 Yet hear the word of the LORD, O Zedekiah king of Judah; Thus saith the LORD of thee, Thou shalt not die by the sword;

5 But [g]thou shalt die in peace: and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee;[2] [h]and they will lament thee, saying, Ah lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the LORD.

6 Then Jeremiah the prophet spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem,

7 When the king of Babylon's army fought [k]against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against [l]Lachish, and against Azekah: for these defenced cities remained of the cities of Judah.

8 ¶ This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, [o]to proclaim liberty unto them;

9 That every man should let his man-ser-but after their return the pastures shall again be "clothed with flocks," Ps. lxv. 13. "In all the cities of Judah and Benjamin there shall be a habitation of shepherds," ver. 12, 13. This speaks, (1.) The wealth of the country after their return. It shall not be a habitation of beggars, who have nothing, but of shepherds and husbandmen, men of substance, with good stocks upon the ground they are returned to. (2.) The peace of the country. It shall not be a habitation of soldiers, nor shall there be tents and barracks set up to lodge them, but there shall be shepherds' tents; for they shall hear no more the alarms of war, nor shall there be any to make even the shepherds afraid, Ps. cxliv. 13, 14. 2. The industry of the country, and their return to their original plainness and simplicity, from which, in the corrupt ages, they had sadly degenerated. The seed of Jacob, in their beginning, gloried in this, that they were "shepherds," Gen. xlvii. 3, and so they shall now be again, giving themselves wholly to that innocent employment, "causing their flocks to lie down," ver. 12, and "to pass under the hands of him that telleth them," ver. 13; for though their flocks are numerous, they are not numberless, nor shall they omit to number them, that they may know if any be missing, and may seek after it.

CHRIST THE KING.—Ver. 15, 16. This promise of the Messiah we had before, chap. xxiii. 5, 6; and there it came in as a confirmation of the promise of the shepherds which God would set over them, which would make one think that the promise here concerning the shepherds and their flocks, which introduces it, is to be understood figuratively. Christ is here prophecied of, 1. As a rightful king; he is a "Branch of righteousness," not a Usurper, for he "grows up unto David," descends from his loins, with whom the covenant of royalty was made, and is that Seed with whom that covenant should be established, so that his title is unexceptionable. 2. As a rightoous King, righteous in enacting laws, waging wars, and giving judgment; righteous in vindicating those that suffer wrong, and punishing those that do wrong. "He shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. This may point at Zerubbabel in the type, who governed with equity, not as Jehoiakim had done, chap. xxii. 17; but it has a further reference to him to whom all judgment was committed, and who shall "judge the world in righteousness." 3. As a king that shall protect his subjects from all injury. By him "Judah shall be saved" from wrath and the curse, and being so saved, "Jerusalem shall dwell safely," quiet from the fear of evil, and enjoying a holy security and serenity of mind, in a dependence upon the conduct of this Prince of peace, this Prince of their peace.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXIV. FATE OF ZEDEKIAH.—Ver. 2—6. Here is a mixture of mercy. He shall die a captive, but he "shall not die by the sword," he shall die a natural death; ver. 4., he shall end his days with some comfort, "shall die in peace," ver. 5. He never had been one of the worst of the kings, but we are willing to hope that what evil he had "done in the sight of the Lord," he repented of it in his captivity, as Manasseh had done, and it was forgiven to him; and God, being reconciled to him, he might truly be said to "die in peace." Note, A man may die in a prison, and yet "die in peace." Nay, he shall end his days with some reputation, more than one would expect, all things considered. He shall be buried "with the burnings of his fathers," with the respect usually shown to their kings, especially those that had done good in Israel. It seems, in his captivity he had conducted himself so well toward his own people, that they were willing to do him this honour, and toward Nebuchadnezzar, that he suffered it to be done. If Zedekiah had continued in his prosperity, perhaps he would have grown worse, and would have "departed" at last "without being desired;" but his affections wrought such a change in him, that his death was looked upon as a great loss. It is better to live and die penitent in a prison, than live and die impenitent in a palace. "They will lament thee, saying, Ah, Lord!" an honour which his brother Jehoiakim had not, chap. xxii. 18. The Jews say that they lamented thus over him, "Alas! Zedekiah is dead, who drank the dregs of all the ages that went before him," who suffered for the sins of his ancestors, the measure of iniquity being filled up in his days. They shall thus lament him, "saith the Lord, for I have pronounced the word;" and what God hath spoken shall without fail be made good.—Henry.

VIOLATION OF THE MOSAIC LAW OF FREEDOM.—Ver. 8—11. The Jews did not generally observe the divine law, in freeing their brethren who had become slaves, after they had served them seven years. But when Jerusalem was straitened by the Chaldeans, the king, perhaps excited by Jeremiah, entered into a solemn covenant with the people, to set at liberty all their Hebrew slaves, and it was proclaimed that none of them, on any pretence, should thus illegally use the service of their brethren: accordingly the law was in this respect complied with. But when Pharaoh's army came out of Egypt to assist them, and the Chaldeans had left the siege of Jerusalem to go and meet them, thinking the danger was over, they impiously violated their solemn covenant, and with the most cruel injustice reduced to slavery the very persons to whom they had just before given freedom—Scott.

ITS AWFUL PENALTY.—Ver. 17—22. It is here threatened, with an observable air of displeasure against them, 1. That, since they had not given liberty to their servants to go where they pleased, God would give all his judgments liberty to take their course against them without control, ver. 17. "You have not proclaimed liberty to your servants." Though they vant, and every man his maid-servant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewess, go free; that none should [p]serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother.

10 Now, [q]when all the princes, and all the people, which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his man-servant, and every one his maid-servant, go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more; then they obeyed, and let them go.

11 But [r]afterward they turned, and caused the servants and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids.

12 ¶ Therefore the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, [s]I made a covenant with your fathers [t]in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying,

14 At [u]the end of seven years let ye go every man his brother an Hebrew, which hath [‡]been sold unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: [3] [x]but your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear.

15 And ye were [§]now turned, and had done right in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour; [z]and ye had made a covenant before me in the house [‖]which is called by my name:

16 But [a]ye turned, and [b]polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure, to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids.

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty, every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour: behold, [c]I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the LORD, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; [4] and [d]I will make you [*]to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

18 And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, [f]when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof, [5]

19 The princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf;

20 I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, [i]and into the hand of them that seek their life: [k]and their dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heaven, and to the beasts of the earth.

CHAP. XXXV.

By the obedience of the Rechabites, 1, the Jews' disobedience is condemned, 12.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, [a]in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Go unto [b]the house of the Rechabites, [1] and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the LORD, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.

3 Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habaziniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites;

4 And I brought them into the house of the LORD, [d]into the chamber of the sons of Hanan the son of Igdaliah, [e]a man of God, which was by [f]the chamber of the princes, [2] which was above the chamber of Maaseiah the son of Shallum, the keeper of the [*]door.

5 And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups; and I said unto them, [h]Drink ye wine.

6 But they said, We will drink no wine: [i]for Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, commanded us, saying, [k]Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons for ever:

7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any; but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.

8 Thus have [n]we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters;

9 Nor to build houses for us to dwell in: [o]neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed:

10 But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us.

11 But it came to pass, when Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians: so we dwell at Jerusalem. [3] had "done it," ver. 10, yet they might truly be said not to have done it, because they did not stand to it, but undid it again; and Factum non dicitur quod non perseverat—That is not said to be done, which does not last. The righteousness that is forsaken and turned away from, shall be forgotten, and "not mentioned" any more, than if it had never been, Ezek. xviii. 24. "'Therefore I will proclaim a liberty for you;' I will discharge you from my service, and put you out of my protection, which those forfeit that withdraw from their allegiance. You shall have liberty to choose which of these judgments you will be cut off by, 'sword, famine, or pestilence;'" such a liberty as was offered to David, which put him into a "great strait," 2 Sam. xxiv. 14. Note, Those that will not be in subjection to the law of God put themselves into subjection to the wrath and curse of God. But this shows what "liberty to sin" really is—it is but a liberty to the sorest judgments. 2. That since they had brought their servants back into confinement in their houses, God would "make them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth," where they shall live in servitude, and, being strangers, could not expect the privileges of free-born subjects. 3. That, since they had broken the covenant which they ratified by a solemn imprecation, God would bring on them the evil which they imprecated upon themselves, in case they should break it. Out of their own mouth will he judge them, and so shall their doom be; the penalty of their bond shall be recovered, because they have not performed the condition; for so some read, ver. 18, "'I will make the men which have transgressed my covenant, as the calf which they cut in twain;' I will divide them in sunder as they divided it in sunder." 4. That since they would not let go their servants out of their hands, God would deliver them into the hands of those that hated them. Even the princes and nobles, both of Judah and Jerusalem, of the country and of the city; eunuchs, chamberlains, or great officers of the court, the priests, and all the people, they had all dealt treacherously with God, and therefore shall all be involved in the common ruin, without exception, ver. 19; they shall all be "given into the hand of their enemies, that seek," not their wealth only, or their service, but "their life." And they shall have what they seek; but neither shall that content them; when they have their lives, they shall leave "their dead bodies" unburied, a loathsome spectacle to all mankind, and an easy prey to the fowls and beasts, a lasting mark of ignominy being here fastened on them.—Henry.

12 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

CHAP. XXXV. THE RECHABITES.—Ver. 4. The Rechabites were a family of the Kenites, who descended from Moses's father-in-law. They had dwelt in the land from the first, but no inheritance seems to have been allotted them. It was doubtless well known, that they had rules of conduct peculiar to themselves: but this trial was made to show their steady adherence to their rules, and the reasons they assigned for it, in order to shame the disobedience of the Jews. "The Rechabites were descended from the Kenites; they were never incorporated with the Jews; but yet were looked on as friends and allies. They were worshippers of the true God, though they were not circumcised." [Lowth.]—The prophet seems to have brought the Rechabites into a chamber adjoining to the temple, and to have been particular in describing it, in order to render the transaction more public; and Hanan, being a man of God, would readily accommodate them. Ver. 5. God commanded Jeremiah to give the Rechabites wine to drink; but he did not command them to drink, so that they were free to refuse it. Ver. 6, 7. Jonadab lived about three hundred years before this time. He had probably practised these rules himself; and having trained up his children to habits of abstemiousness, he enjoined them and their posterity to adhere to them. He seems to have desired, that they should be, as much as possible, kept from temptations to avarice, luxury, and sensuality; and be a hardy, self-denied, and industrious race. He might also foresee the calamities, which were likely to come on Judah and Israel, and desire that his posterity should be prepared for the worst. He seems to have wished them to avoid giving umbrage, or exciting the jealousy or envy of those among whom they lived, which would have been the natural effect of their living in opulence, magnificence, or luxury: for one reason of his rules was, "that they might live long in the land where they were strangers." But above all, he doubtless meant, that they should be devoted to God, as a race of perpetual Nazarites; and he deemed these rules conducive to this end, and calculated to render them simple, humble, patient, and superior to the delights of sense. Ver. 13—16. The command given to the Rechabites, originated from a man like themselves, to whom their obligations were small, when compared with those of the Jews to their God; and whose authority was limited and inconsiderable, compared with that of JEHOVAH. When Jonadab died, all his authority expired with him: he could no longer remind his children of his injunctions, take cognizance of their conduct, reward their obedience, or punish their disobedience. Yet, out of respect to his memory, deference to his wisdom, or experience of the salutary effects of his counsels, they persevered in observing them. But the Jews disobeyed the commands of God, who daily loaded them with benefits; whose authority continued in full force, who earnestly and frequently reminded them of their duty, and called them to repentance; and who could reward or punish them, as much, and as long as he pleased! Ver. 18, 19. The Rechabites seem to have been preserved comparatively uncorrupt, by observing these rules: their respect to their venerable ancestor was commendable, and showed a docile disposition; their peculiarities do not seem to have been leavened by superstition, spiritual pride, moroseness, or censoriousness; but to have

14 The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; [t]but ye hearkened not unto me.[4]

15 I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying, [u]Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers: but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me.

4 Then Jeremiah called [g]Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch [m]wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the LORD, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book.

5 And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the LORD:

6 Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, [o]the words of the LORD, in the ears of the people, in the LORD's house upon the fasting-day:[2] and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities.

7 It [q]may be [*]they will present their supplication before the LORD, and will return every one from his evil way: [r]for great is the anger and the fury that the LORD hath pronounced against this people.

8 And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the LORD in the LORD's house.

9 And it came to pass, [s]in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month, [t]that they proclaimed a fast before the LORD to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10 Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the LORD, in the chamber[3] of [y]Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the entry of the new [†]gate of the LORD's house, in the ears of all the people.

11 ¶ When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of [*]Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the LORD,

12 Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber: and, lo, all the princes sat there,[4] even [b]Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and [c]Elnathan the son of Achbor, and [d]Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes.

13 Then Michaiah [e]declared unto them all the words that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people.

14 Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of [f]Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of [g]Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thine hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah [h]took the roll in his hand, and came unto them.

15 And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears.

16 Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, [i]they were afraid, both been subservient to piety. Their temperance, frugality, and hardiness would favour their preservation amid the desolations of the land; even their poverty would tend to secure them from the conqueror; and it was proper that God should avow his readiness to reward every degree of good, when he determined to punish his apostate people. Accordingly he promised that the family of the Rechabites should be very durably continued; and upheld in the practice of piety and righteousness before him, as his accepted worshippers, even when the Jews were cast out of his sight. This appears to be the meaning of the expression, "to stand before the LORD."—Scott.

CHAP. XXXVI. JEREMIAH'S ROLL.—Ver. 1—8. We have here the command which God gave to Jeremiah to write a summary of his sermons, of all the reproofs and all the warnings he had given in God's name to his people, ever since he first began to be a preacher, in the thirteenth year of Josiah, to this day, which was in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, ver. 2, 3. What had been spoken only, must now be written, that it might be reviewed, and that it might spread the further, and last the longer. What had been spoken at large, with frequent repetitions of the same things, perhaps in the same words, (which has its advantage one way,) must now be contracted, and put into less compass, that the several parts of it might be better compared together, which has its advantage another way. What they had heard once, must be recapitulated, and rehearsed to them again, that what was forgotten, might be called to mind again, and what made no impression upon them at the first hearing, might take hold of them when they heard it the second time. And what was perhaps already written, and published in single sermons, must be collected into one volume, that none might be lost. Note, The writing of the Scripture is by divine appointment. And observe the reason here given for the writing of this roll, ver. 3, "It may be, the house of Judah will hear." Not that the divine presence was at any uncertainty concerning the event, with that there is no peradventure: God knew certainly, "that they would deal very treacherously," Is. xlviii. 8. But the divine wisdom directed to this as a proper means for attaining the desired end; if it failed, they would be the more inexcusable.—Henry.

READING OF THE ROLL BY BARUCH.—Ver. 9. As the command was given in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and this is dated in his fifth year, many expositors are of opinion that the roll was twice read; once in the fourth year, when it was little noticed, and afterwards in the fifth year. And as Jeremiah was shut up when he first ordered Baruch to read the roll, but had liberty to make his escape after it had been read, they conclude that two distinct readings must be intended. Others think, that the writing of the roll might take up a considerable time: and that it was deemed expedient to wait for the fasting-day, as the most convenient time for reading it, which was in the fifth year of Jehoiakim; and that Jeremiah was not shut up in prison, but confined from going to the temple, by some other hinderance; and though he was at liberty when the notice was taken of Baruch's reading the roll, yet he had not gone up to the temple to read it himself. If the roll was twice read, (which indeed seems the more probable opinion,) it is supposed, that the first time, was on the great day of atonement; and that, soon after, Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem, and carried Jehoiakim to Babylon. But having made submission to the victor, he was restored to the throne; and, just after his return, the roll was read the second time on a fast, proclaimed and observed in commemoration of that first taking of Jerusalem; and which hath ever since been annually observed by the Jews on the eighteenth day of the ninth month.—Scott.

BURNING OF THE ROLL BY THE KING.—Ver. 25. We find, 1. That, upon notice given him concerning it, the king sent for it, and ordered it to be read to him. He did not desire that Baruch would come and read it himself, who could read it more intelligently, and with more authority and affection, than any one else; nor did he order one of his princes to do it; (though it had been no disparagement to the greatest of them;) much less would he vouchsafe to read it himself; but Jehudi, one of his pages now in waiting, who was sent to fetch it, is bid to read it, who, perhaps, scarcely knew how to make sense of it. But those who thus despise the word of God, will soon make it to appear, as this king here did, that they hate it too, and have not only low but ill thoughts of it. 2. That he had not patience to hear it read through as the princes had, but that, when he had heard "three or four leaves" in a rage, he "cut it with his penknife," and threw it piece by piece "into the fire," that he might be sure to see it "all consumed." This was a piece of as daring impiety as a man could lightly be guilty of, and a most impudent affront to the God of heaven, whose message this was. (1.) Thus he showed his impatience of reproof; being resolved to persit in sin, he would by no means bear to be told of his faults. (2.) Thus he showed his indignation at Baruch and Jeremiah; he would have cut them in pieces, and burned them, if he had had them in his reach, when he was in this passion. (3.) Thus he expressed an obstinate resolution, never to comply with the designs and intentions of the warnings given him; he will do what he will, whatever God by his prophets says to the contrary. (4.) Thus he foolishly hoped to defeat the threatenings denounced against him; as if God knew not how to execute the sentence when the roll was gone in which it was written. (5.) Thus he thought he had effectually provided that the things contained in this roll should spread no further, which was the case of the chief priest concerning the gospel, Acts iv. 17. They had told him how this roll had been read to the people and to the princes; "But" (says he) "I will one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words.

17 And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth?

18 Then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book.

19 Then said the princes unto Baruch, [n]Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah; and let no man know where ye be.[5]

20 ¶ And they went in to the king into the court, but [o]they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

21 So the king sent [p]Jehudi to fetch the roll; and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber: [q]and Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

22 Now the king sat in the winter house, in the ninth month:[6] and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.

23 And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, [s]he cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth,[7] until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

24 Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words.

25 Nevertheless [x]Elnathan, and Delaiah, and Gemariah, had [y]made intercession to the king that he would not burn the roll: but he would not hear them.

26 But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son of [‡]Hammelech, and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, [z]to take Baruch the scribe, and Jeremiah the prophet: [a]but the LORD hid them.

27 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, (after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah,) saying, 28 Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

29 And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the LORD, [d]Thou hast burned this roll, saying, [e]Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast?

30 Therefore thus saith the LORD of Jehoiakim king of Judah, [f]He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David: [g]and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.[8]

31 And I will [§]punish him, and his seed, and his servants, for their iniquity; and [h]I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them: but they hearkened not.

32 ¶ Then [i]took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; [k]who wrote therein, from the mouth of Jeremiah, all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: [l]and there were added besides unto them many [‖]like words.[9] take a course that shall prevent its being read any more." See what an enmity there is against God in the carnal mind, and wonder at the patience of God, that he bears with such indignities done to him! 3. That neither the king himself, nor any of his princes, were at all affected with the word; "They were not afraid," no, not those princes that "trembled at the word," when they heard it the first time. So soon, so easily, do good impressions wear off! They showed some concern till they saw how light the king made of it, and then they shook off all that concern. They "rent not their garments," as Josiah did; this Jehoiakim's own father did, when he had the "book of the law" read to him, though it was not so particular as the contents of this roll were, nor so immediately adapted to the present posture of affairs. 4. That there were three of the princes who had so much sense and grace left as to interpose for the preventing of the burning of the roll, but in vain.

The Egyptians having caused the Chaldeans to raise the siege of Jerusalem, Zedekiah sendeth to Jeremiah, 1, who prophesieth the Chaldeans' return and victory, 6; he is beaten, and put in prison, 11.

THE ROLL RE-WRITTEN.—Jeremiah had orders and instructions to write in another roll the same words that were written in the roll which Jehoiakim had burnt, ver. 27, 28. Note, Though the attempts of hell against the word of God are very daring, yet not one iota or tittle of it shall fall to the ground, nor shall the unbelief of man make the word of God of no effect. Enemies may prevail to burn many a Bible, but they cannot abolish the word of God, can neither extirpate it, nor defeat the accomplishment of it. Though the tables of the law were broken, they were renewed again; and so out of the ashes of the roll that was burnt, arose another phœnix. "The word of the Lord endures for ever." The king of Judah, though a king, was severely reckoned with by the King of kings for this indignity done to the written word. God noticed what it was in the roll that Jehoiakim took so much offence at. Jehoiakim was angry, because it was "written therein, saying," Surely "the king of Babylon shall come and destroy this land."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—19. Faithful ministers must use every method of awakening the consciences of sinners, if "peradventure God will give them repentance, for the acknowledgment of the truth." His revealed word, and not his secret purpose, is the rule of their conduct; and they must "declare his whole counsel," whether men will hear or forbear, and without desisting because of ill success.—The Lord declares the evil he purposes to do against sinners; that they may "hear and fear, and return from their evil ways:" they who make this use of his warnings, in dependence on his promised mercy, will find him ready to forgive all their iniquities; and all others will be left without excuse.—Different advantages result from the proposal of truth by word of mouth, and by writing; the former is generally more copious, particular, energetic, and affecting; the latter more exact, compendious, and permanent. Both should then be used, "according to the ability that God giveth to every man."—Many attend upon the outward forms of religion, and pretend humiliation, mortification, and devotion, who are not humbled for their sins, and who do not mortify their lusts, present their supplication before the Lord, or return from their evil ways. Yet when multitudes are collected together on such occasions, the ministers of God may find a favourable opportunity of calling them to repentance, and warning them to flee from impending judgments. But national fasts, without national reformation, will avail little to turn away the wrath of God; especially as they who appoint such solemnities, often do not so much as sanction them by their own example! A faithful declaration of divine truth will attract some attention; but in general it reaches past the ears of those who are most advanced in rank and authority, and too often finds them most closed against it.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXVII. SIEGE OF JERUSALEM RAISED.—Ver. 5. Jerusalem also, for the present, was at liberty. Zedekiah, though a tributary to the king of Babylon, had entered into a private league with Pharaoh, king of Egypt, Ezek. xvii. 15, pursuant to which, when the king of Babylon came to chastise him for his treachery, the king of Egypt, though he came no more in person, after that great defeat which Nebuchadnezzar gave him in the reign of Jehoiakim, 2 Kings xxiv. 7, yet sent some forces to relieve Jerusalem when it was besieged; upon notice of the approach of which, the Chaldeans raised the siege, probably not for fear of them, but in policy, to fight them at a distance, before any of the Jewish forces could join them. From this they encouraged themselves to hope that Jerusalem was delivered for good and all out of the hands of its enemies, and that the storm was quite blown over. Note, Sinners are commonly hardened in their security by the intermissions of judgments, and the slow proceedings of them; and those who will not be awakened by the word of God, may justly be lulled asleep by the providence of God.—Henry.

JEREMIAH RECAPTURED.—Ver. 12—15. Many of the Jews seem to have taken the opportunity of the Chaldeans' departure, to leave the city, either to attend to their private concerns, or to shift for their safety; and Jeremiah, seeing no prospect of doing any good, sought to retire, either to Anathoth or some other place. It is not clear what his intentions were: however, the Lord had otherwise appointed concerning him; and the malignity of his people was exposed by it. For being met with by Irijah, who was the grandson of Hananiah, (the false prophet, as it is most probable,) he was apprehended and accused of deserting to the Chaldeans; because he had counselled the people to surrender, as the only method of saving themselves and the city; and though he denied the charge, (and doubtless he had no such intention,) he was treated with the salem to go into the land of Benjamin, to [l]separate himself thence in the midst of the people.

13 And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, [m]Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.

14 Then said Jeremiah, It is [*]false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him: so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

15 Wherefore [y]the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and [z]put him in prison, in the house of Jonathan the scribe; for they had made that the prison.

16 ¶ When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the [†]cabins,[4] and Jeremiah had remained there many days;

17 Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him out; and the king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the LORD? And Jeremiah said, There is: [5] for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.

18 Moreover, Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison?

19 Where are now [f]your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land?

20 Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: let my supplication, I pray thee, [‡]be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there.

21 Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah [h]into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the baker's street,[6] until all the bread in the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

THEN Shephatiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah, [d]heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, [e]He that remaineth in this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; for he shall have his life for a prey, and shall live.

[5] It is a proof of the firmness and integrity of the prophet, that he should thus predict the captivity and afflictions of his sovereign, especially at a moment when he had incurred the perilous suspicion of favouring the cause of the enemy.—RICHARDS.

[c] Luke xxii 67, 68.

[d] xxxvii. 17. John iii. 2.

3 Thus saith the LORD, [g]This city shall surely be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it.

4 Therefore the princes said unto the king, We beseech thee, let this man be put to death; for [i]thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them: for this man seeketh not the [*]welfare of this people, but the hurt.

5 Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you.

6 Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him [k]into the dungeon of Malchiah the son of [†]Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison: [m]and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire.

7 ¶ Now, when [o]Ebed-melech [p]the Ethiopian,[1] one of the eunuchs which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon, (the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin,)

8 Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying,

9 My lord the king, [*]these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is [‡]like to die for hunger in the place where he is: for there is no more bread in the city.

10 Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take from hence thirty men [§]with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon before he die.

11 So Ebed-melech took the men with him,[2] and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts, and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

12 And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine arm-holes, under the cords. And Jeremiah did so.

13 So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: [z]and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

14 ¶ Then Zedekiah the king [a]sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the [‡]third entry,[3] that is in the house of the LORD: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me.

15 Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, [c]wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me?

16 So Zedekiah the king [d]sware secretly unto Jeremiah, saying, As the LORD liveth, utmost cruelty and indignity, and committed to the most dismal and noisome prison, which the enraged princes could find out. The former word, rendered prison, often means chains. "They put him in chains, in the house," &c.—Scott.

THE PROPHET'S PETITION.—Ver. 20. "Cause me not to return," to yonder noisome gaol, "to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there." This was the language of innocent nature, sensible of its own grievances, and solicitous for its own preservation. Though he was not at all unwilling to die God's martyr, yet, having so fair an opportunity to get relief, he would not let it slip, lest he should die his own murderer. When Jeremiah delivered God's message, he spake, as one having authority, with the greatest boldness; but when he presented his own request, he spake as one under authority, with the greatest submissiveness; "Hear me, I pray thee, O my lord the king, let my supplications, I pray thee, be accepted before thee." Here is not a word of complaint of the princes that unjustly committed him, no offer to bring an action of false imprisonment against them, but all in a way of modest supplication to the king, to teach us that even when we act with the courage that becomes the faithful servants of God, yet we must conduct ourselves with the humility and modesty that become dutiful subjects to the government God hath set over us. A lion in God's cause, must be a lamb in his own. And we find that God gave Jeremiah favour in the eyes of the king. 1. He gave him his request, took care that he should not die in the dungeon, but ordered that he should have the liberty of the "court of the prison," where he might have a pleasant walk, and breathe a free air. 2. He gave him more than his request, took care that he should not die for want, as many did that had their liberty, by reason of the straitness of the siege; he ordered him his "daily bread out of the" public stock, (for the prison was within the verge of the court,) "till all the bread was spent." Zedekiah ought to have released him, nay to have preferred him, to have made him a privy-counsellor, as Joseph was taken from prison, to be the second man in the kingdom.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXVIII. JEREMIAH LOWERED INTO A LOATHSOME DUNGEON.—Ver. 1—6. Some of these persons were sent by Zedekiah to Jeremiah, to inquire concerning the event of the siege, and to desire his prayers. Jeremiah, though confined in the court of the prison, continued to prophesy; and they who had access to him, dispersed his predictions throughout the city. This greatly offended the princes, who determined to defend themselves to the last extremity: and they resolved to put him to death. In order to this they represented him to the king, as an enemy to his people, who intentionally sought their hurt; though his labours, sufferings, tears, and supplications abundantly proved his fervent love to them; and Zedekiah, (who seems to have been a prince of slender capacity, and who was greatly in the power of his nobles, by reason of his difficult circumstances,) would not venture any thing to protect him, but abjectly left him in the hands of his enemies. Having thus got his consent, the malicious princes, without delay, caused the prophet to be let down into a dungeon or pit, where he sank in the mire, and must soon miserably have perished. Probably they intended to have then given out that he died in prison; and, perhaps, this dungeon was prepared for such silent executions, "Some think that when he was in this dismal place, he made those mournful meditations, which are set down in the third chapter of the Lamentations." [Lowth.]—Hammelech signifies the king; the dungeon seems to have belonged to one of Zedekiah's sons.—Scott.

HIS RELEASE.—Ver. 7. "Ebed-melech" was an Ethiopian, a "stranger to the commonwealth of Israel," and yet had in him more humanity, and more divinity too, than native Israelites had. Christ found more faith among Gentiles than among Jews. Ebed-melech lived in a wicked court, and a very corrupt degenerate age, and yet had a great sense both of equity and piety. God has his remnant in all places, among all sorts. There were saints even in Cæsar's household. The king was now "sitting in the gates of Benjamin," to try causes, and receive appeals and petitions, or perhaps holding a council of war there: thither Ebed-melech went immediately to him, for the case would not admit delay; the prophet might have perished, if he had trifled, or put it off till he had an opportunity of speaking to the king in private. No time must be lost, when life is in danger, especially so valuable a life. He boldly asserts that Jeremiah had a great deal of wrong done him, and is not afraid to tell the king so, though they were princes that did it, though they were now present in court, and though they had the king's warrant for what they did. Special notice is taken of his great tenderness in providing old soft rags for Jeremiah to put under his arm-holes, to keep the cords from hurting him, wherewith he was to be drawn up, his arm-holes being, probably, galled by the cords wherewith he was let down. Nor did he throw the rags down to him, lest they should be lost in the mire, but carefully let them down, ver. 11, 12. Note, Those that are in distress should not only be relieved, but relieved with compassion and marks of respect; all which shall be placed to account, and abound to a good account in the day of recompense. See what a good use even old rotten rags may be put to, which, therefore, should not be made waste of, any more than broken meat; even in the king's house, and "under the treasury" too, these were carefully preserved for the use of the poor or sick.

THE PROPHET'S FIDELITY.—Ver. 17. The good advice that Jeremiah gave him, with good reasons why he should take it, not from any prudence or politics of his own, [e]that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand [f]of these men that seek thy life.

17 Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the God of hosts, the God of Israel, [g]If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burnt with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house:

18 But [h]if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, [i]then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

19 And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, [k]I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they [l]mock me.[4]

20 But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. [m]Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the LORD, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live.

21 But [n]if thou refuse to go forth, [o]this is the word that the LORD hath shewed me:

22 And, behold, [p]all the women that are left in the king of Judah's house shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon's princes, and those women shall say, *Thy friends [q]have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee; [r]thy feet are sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back.[5]

23 So [s]they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans: and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon; and thou [t]shalt cause this city to be burnt with fire.

24 ¶ Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die.

25 But if [u]the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death; also what the king said unto thee:

26 Then thou shalt say unto them, [x]I presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house, to die there.

27 Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: [z]and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So they [‡]left off speaking with him; for the matter was not perceived.[6]

28 So Jeremiah [y]abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Jerusalem is taken, 1. Zedekiah is made blind, and sent to Babylon, 4. The city is ruined, 8, and the people carried into captivity, 9.

IN [a]the ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it.

2 And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in [b]the fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city [c]was broken up.[1]

3 And [d]all the princes of the king of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate, even [e]Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo, Sarsechim, Rab-saris, Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, with all the residue of the princes of the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate betwixt the two walls: and he went out the way of the plain.

5 But the [b]Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah [f]in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon [h]to Riblah, in the land of Hamath, where he *gave judgment upon him.

6 Then the king of Babylon [l]slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon [n]slew all the nobles of Judah.

7 Moreover, [o]he put out Zedekiah's eyes,[2] and bound him with †chains, to carry him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And the Chaldeans [p]burnt the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, [q]and brake down the walls of Jerusalem.

9 Then [r]Nebuzar-adan the ‡captain of the guard [s]carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained.

10 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard [t]left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields [§]at the same time.

11 ¶ Now Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon [u]gave charge concerning Jeremiah [‖]to Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying, 12 Take him, and *look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee.

13 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard sent, and Nebushasban, Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, and all the king of Babylon's princes;

14 Even they sent, and [z]took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison, and committed him unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, but in the "name of the Lord, the God of hosts" and "God of Israel;" not as a statesman, but as a prophet, he advises him by all means to surrender himself and the city "to the king of Babylon's princes;" "'Go forth to them,' and make the best terms thou canst with them." This was the advice he had given to the people, ver. 2, and before, chap. xxi. 9, to submit to divine judgments, and not think of contending with them. Note, in dealing with God, that which is good counsel to the meanest, is so to the greatest, for "there is no respect of persons" with him. To persuade him to take this counsel, he sets before him good and evil, life and death. 1. If he will tamely yield, he shall save his children from the sword, and Jerusalem from the flames. The white flag is yet hung out; if he will but acknowledge God's justice, he shall experience his mercy; "The city shall not be burnt," and "thou shalt live, and thy house." But, 2. If he will obstinately stand it out, it will be the ruin both of his house and Jerusalem, ver. 18; for when God judges he will overcome. This is the case of sinners with God; let them humbly submit to his grace and government, and they shall live; let them "take hold on his strength, that they make peace, and they shall make peace;" but if they harden their hearts against his proposals, it will certainly be to their destruction; they must either bend or break. Jeremiah spake to him by prophecy, in the name of God, and, therefore, if he had had a due regard to the divine authority, wisdom, and goodness, as soon as he understood what the mind of God was, he should immediately have acquiesced in it, and resolved to observe it without disputing; but as if he had been the dictate only of Jeremiah's prudence, he advances against it some prudential considerations of his own; but human wisdom is folly when it contradicts the divine counsels.—Henry.

THE KING'S OBSTINACY.—Ver. 24—28. Zedekiah would not follow the prophet's advice: nay, he even seems to have hesitated as to his oath of protecting him, and to have substituted for it a conditional promise. He was slavishly afraid of the princes. He supposed that they would certainly hear of this interview; and he proposed to him to inform them, that he had petitioned the king not to send him again to the dungeon in Jonathan's house. As this was truth, and as the princes had no right to be informed of all that had passed, Jeremiah complied, and was thus preserved in the court of the prison till the city was taken. This seems to have been his last interview with Zedekiah.—What a view do these verses give of the extreme wickedness and impiety prevalent in Judah, especially in the superior orders!—Whatever was proposed to this most eminent and excellent servant of God, and friend to his people, by either the king or his nobles; the highest recompense was a promise that he should not be put to death! A promise which could not, in the smallest degree, be depended on.—Scott.

CHAP. XXXIX. OVERTHROW OF THE CITY.—Ver. 1, 2. The city is at length taken by storm; for how could it hold out when God himself fought against it? Nebuchadnezzar's army sat down before it in the "ninth" year of Zedekiah, "in the tenth month," in the depth of winter. Nebuchadnezzar himself soon after retired to take his pleasure, and left his generals to carry on the siege: they intermitted it a while, but soon renewed it with redoubled force and vigour. At length, "in the eleventh year, in the fourth month," about midsummer, they entered the city, the soldiers being so weakened by famine, and all their provisions being now spent, that they were not able to make any resistance. Jerusalem was so strong a place, that nobody would have believed the enemy could ever have entered its gates, Lam. iv. 12. But sin had provoked God to withdraw his protection, and then, like Samson, when his hair is cut, it is weak as other cities.

CAPTURE OF ZEDEKIAH.—Ver. 4—6. Zedekiah, having in disguise perhaps seen the princes of the king of Babylon take possession of one of the gates of the city, thought it high time to shift for his own safety, and, loaded with guilt and fear, he "went out of the city," under no other protection but that of "the night," which soon failed him, for he was discovered, pursued, and overtaken; though he made the best of his way, he could make nothing of it, could not get forward, but, "in the plains of Jericho," fell into the hands of the pursuers: thence he was brought prisoner to Riblah, where the king of Babylon passed sentence upon him as a rebel, not sentence of death, but one may almost say, a worse thing. For, 1. He "slew his sons before his eyes," and they must all be little, some of them infants, for Zedekiah himself was now but thirty-two years of age. 2. He "slew all the nobles of Judah," probably not those princes of Jerusalem who had advised him to this desperate course, (it would be a satisfaction to him to see them cut off,) but the great men of the country who were innocent of the matter. 3. He ordered "Zedekiah to have his eyes put out." 4. "He bound him with two brazen chains or fetters," (so the margin reads it,) to carry him away to Babylon, there to spend the rest of his days in misery. All this sad story we had before, 2 Kings xxv. 4, &c.

SAFETY OF THE PROPHET.—Nebuchadnezzar had given particular orders that care should be taken of him, and that he should be in all respects well used, ver. 11, 12. Nebuzar-adan, and the rest of the king of Babylon's princes, observed these orders, and discharged him out of prison, and did every thing to make him easy, ver. 13, 14. Now we may look upon this as a very generous act of Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he was a haughty potentate, yet took cognizance of this poor prophet; doubtless he had received information concerning him from the deserters, that he had foretold the king of Babylon's successes against Judah and other countries, that he had pressed his prince and the son of Shaphan, that he should carry him home: so he dwelt among the people.

15 ¶ Now the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, [c]while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

16 Go and speak to [d]Ebed-melech the Ethiopian,[3] saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [e]Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and they shall be accomplished in that day [f]before thee.

17 But [g]I will deliver thee in that day, saith the LORD; and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid.

18 For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, [h]but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee; [i]because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORD.

CHAP. XL.

Jeremiah, being set free by Nebuzar-adan, goeth to Gedaliah, 1. The dispersed Jews repair to him, 7. Ishmael's conspiracy, 13.

THE word which came to Jeremiah from the LORD, [a]after that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had let him go from [b]Ramah,[1] when he had taken him, being bound in *chains among all that were carried away captive of Jerusalem and Judah, which were carried away captive unto Babylon.

2 And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, [c]The LORD thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place.

3 Now the LORD hath brought it, and done according as he hath said: [d]because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you.

4 And now, behold, I loose thee this day from the chains which †were upon thine hand. If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come, and I will ‡look well unto thee; but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me into Babylon, forbear: behold, [e]all the land is before thee:[2] whither it seemeth good and convenient for thee to go, thither go.

5 Now, while he was not yet gone back, he said, [f]Go back also to Gedaliah the son of [g]Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people; [h]or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard [i]gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go.

6 Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to [k]Mizpah,[3] and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

7 ¶ Now, when [l]all the captains of the forces[4] which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of [m]the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon;

8 Then they [n]came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, [o]even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and [p]Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai [q]the Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of [r]a Maachathite, they and their men.

9 And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, [s]sware unto them, and to their men, saying, [t]Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

10 As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to [u]serve the Chaldeans which will come unto us; but ye, [v]gather ye wine, and [x]summer-fruits, and oil,[5] and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken.

11 Likewise, when [y]all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan;

12 Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer-fruits very much.[6]

13 ¶ Moreover, [z]Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah,

14 And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalis the king of the [a]Ammonites[7] hath sent [b]Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to [l]slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam [c]believed them not.

15 Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, [d]Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: [e]wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish?

16 But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, [f]Thou shalt not do this thing; for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

people to submit to him, and that he had suffered very hard things for so doing; and in consideration of all this, (though perhaps he might have heard also that he had foretold the destruction of Babylon at length,) he gave him these extraordinary marks of his favour. CHAP. XL. GEDALIAH THE GOVERNOR.—Ver. 5. This Gedaliah was "made governor of the" land under "the king of Babylon," an honest Jew, who (it is probable) betimes went over with his friends to the Chaldeans, and approved himself so well, that he had this great trust put into his hands, ver. 5. "While" Jeremiah "was not yet gone back," but stood considering what he should do, Nebuzar-adan, perceiving him neither inclined to go to Babylon, nor determined whither to go, turned the scale for him, and bid him by all means "go to Gedaliah." Sudden thoughts sometimes prove wise ones. But when he gave this counsel he did not design to oblige him by it, nor will he take it ill if he do not follow it; "Go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee." It is friendly in such cases to give advice, but unfriendly to prescribe, and to be angry if our advice be not taken. Let Jeremiah steer what course he please, Nebuzar-adan will agree to it, and believe he does for the best. Nor does he only give him his liberty, and an approbation of the measures he shall take, but provides for his support; he "gave him victuals, and a" present, either in clothes or money, "and so let him go." See how considerate "the captain of the guard" was in his kindness to Jeremiah. He set him at liberty, but it was in a country that was laid waste, and in which, as the posture of it now was, he might have perished, though it was his own country, if he had not thus kindly furnished him with necessaries. Jeremiah not only accepted his kindness, but took his advice, and went to Gedaliah, to Mizpah, "and dwelt with him," ver. 6. Whether we may herein commend his prudence, I know not; the event does not commend it, for it did not prove at all to his comfort. However, we may commend his pious affection to the land of Israel, that, unless he were forced out of it, as Ezekiel, and Daniel, and other good men were, he would not forsake it, but chose rather to dwell with the poor in the holy land, than with princes in an unholy one.

HIS GOVERNMENT.—Ver. 10. Gedaliah gave them the assurance of an oath, that he will do his part in protecting them, but being apt to err (as many good men are) on the charitable side, yet did not require an oath from them, that they would be faithful to him, else the following mischief might have been prevented. However, protection draws allegiance, though it be not sworn; and, by joining in with Gedaliah, they did, in effect, consent to the terms of government, that they should "serve the king of Babylon." But though they own all the property of their lands to be in the Chaldeans, yet, upon that condition, they shall have the free enjoyment of them, and all the profits of them; "'Gather ye wine and summer-fruits,' and take them for your own use; 'put them in your vessels,' to be laid up for winter-store, as those do that live in a land of peace, and hope to 'eat the labour of your hand;' nay, the labour of other people's hands, for you reap what they sowed." Or perhaps they were the spontaneous products of that fertile soil, for which none had laboured. And accordingly we find, ver. 12, that they "gathered wine and summer-fruits very much," such as were present upon the ground, for their corn-harvest was over some time before Jerusalem was taken. While Gedaliah was in care for the public safety, he left them to enjoy the advantages of the public plenty, and for aught appears, demanded no tribute from them; for he sought not his own profit, but the profit of many.—Henry.

JOHANAN.—Ver. 13—16. Johanan and his companions seem to have acted honestly in this affair. They had received certain intelligence of the plot formed against Gedaliah's life, and consequently against the whole new settlement. Ishmael, (whose very name seemed hostile to Israel,) being a branch of David's family, was perhaps displeased that another was preferred above him. And the king of the Ammonites, (as it seems out of hatred to the Jews,) employed him to slay Gedaliah. But Gedaliah meaning honestly was too unsuspecting; and as Johanan proposed a violent method of defeating Ishmael's design, it is probable that he considered the information as malicious. Yet he certainly ought to have examined into the evidence, and to have confined Ishmael; or to have taken some precautions for his own safety, on which that of the people so much depended. But he was left to this indiscretion, that judgment might come to the uttermost on this incorrigible remnant of the Jews.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Many can see the justice of God's judgments, and the truths of his words, in the case of others, who are heedless or blind as to those things which relate to themselves. Nay, some can plead the prophecies in vindication of their own cruel oppressions; and think themselves justified, because the Scripture is fulfilled; though it was equally fulfilled by the treachery of Judas, and the malice of those who crucified Christ! None, however are so hardened as apostate professors of religion.—It is allowable for faithful ministers to receive the proffered kindness even of ungodly men, when it can be done without appearance of selfishness, when it does not tend to deceive the giver, and when it is not to be purchased or repaid by any sinful compliances or flatteries. Nay, their counsel may be often taken in secular matters; for they are "wise in their generation."—They, who earnestly desire the salvation of sinners and the prosperity of the church, are apt to take encouragement from transient appearances, to

CHAP. XLI.

Ishmael treacherously killeth Gedaliah and others, 1. Johanan recovereth the captives, 11.

NOW it came to pass in the seventh month, that [b]Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed-royal, and the princes of the king, even ten men with him, came unto Gedaliah[1] the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; [c]and there they did eat bread together in Mizpah.

2 Then arose Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and the ten men that were with him, and [d]smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, with the sword, and slew him, [f]whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land.

3 Ishmael also [g]slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah, at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war.

4 And it came to pass, the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man knew it,

5 That there came certain from [k]Shechem, from [l]Shiloh, and from [m]Samaria,[2] even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them [o]to the house of the LORD.

6 And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, *weeping all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.

7 And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah [p]slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.

8 But ten men were found among them that said unto Ishmael, [q]Slay us not; for we have treasures in the field,[3] of wheat, and of barley, and of oil, and of honey. So he forbare, and slew them not among their brethren.

9 Now the pit[4] wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men (whom he had slain [t]because of Gedaliah,) was it which [r]Asa the king had made, for fear of Baasha king of Israel: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain.

10 Then Ishmael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed to go over [x]to the Ammonites.

11 ¶ But when [y]Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done,

12 Then they took all the men, and went [z]to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by [a]the great waters that are in Gibeon.[5]

13 Now it came to pass, that when all the people which were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad.

14 So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about, and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah.

15 But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah [b]escaped from Johanan with [c]eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

16 Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, (after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam,) [d]even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibeon:

17 And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of [e]Chimham,[6] which is by Bethlehem, [f]to go to enter into Egypt, 18 Because of the Chaldeans: [g]for they were afraid of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, [h]whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

CHAP. XLII.

Johanan and others, promising obedience, desire Jeremiah to enquire of God, 1. Jeremiah's answer, 7. Their hypocrisy reproved, 19.

THEN [a]all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and [b]Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah, and all the people, [c]from the least even unto the greatest, [d]came near,

2 And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, Let, we beseech thee, our supplication *be accepted before thee, *and pray for us[1] unto the LORD thy God, even for all this remnant; (for we are [f]left but a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us;)

3 That the LORD thy God [g]may shew us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do.

4 Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard you; behold, [h]I will pray unto the LORD your God according to your words; and it shall come to pass, that [i]whatsoever thing the LORD shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; [k]I will keep nothing back from you.

CHAP. XLI. ASSASSINATION OF GEDALIAH.—Ver. 2, 3. Gedaliah was evidently imprudent in taking no precaution against a person, whom he had great reason to suspect, both as a rival, and on account of the caution which Johanan had given him: but his unsuspecting generosity aggravated the baseness of Ishmael's conduct.—Had not the other captains been infatuated, either by envy, resentment, or by a selfish regard to their private concerns; they would have been more careful, in defending a life, on which the safety of the whole company so greatly depended.—Ishmael, by coming to Gedaliah, had virtually submitted to his authority, and claimed his protection; and he was at this time, along with his friends, hospitably entertained by Gedaliah.—Yet he slew "all that joined with Gedaliah in opposing him; for several of the commanders, as well as the greatest part of the people, were still left alive, as it appears by the sequel." [Lowth.] Many of these, however, seem to have been absent from Mizpah at this time, gathering in the fruits of the earth, or attending to their private concerns: so that all present, that stood out in resistance, seem to have been slain; and the rest kept in close confinement, that the transaction might be concealed till Ishmael had completed his designs. The care which had been taken to conceal the murder of Gedaliah, &c., gave Ishmael an opportunity of still further increasing the number and atrocity of his crimes.—Scott.

JOHANAN'S ATTACK ON THE MURDERERS.—Ver. 12. Johanan gathered what forces he could, "and went to fight with Ishmael;" upon notice of the murders he had committed, (for though he concealed it for a time, yet murder will out,) and which way he was gone, he pursued him, and overtook him by the great "pool of Gibeon," which we read of, 2 Sam. ii. 13. And upon his appearing with such a force, Ishmael's heart failed him, his guilty conscience flew in his face, and he durst not stand his ground against an enemy that was something like a match for him. The most cruel are often the most cowardly. The poor captives "were glad when they saw Johanan," and "the captains that were with him," looking upon them as their deliverers, ver. 13, and they immediately found a way to wheel about, and come over to them, ver. 14, Ishmael, not offering to detain them when he saw Johanan. Note, Those that would be helped must help themselves. These captives stayed not till their conquerors were beaten, but took the first opportunity to make their escape, as soon as they saw their friends appear, and their enemies thereby disheartened. Ishmael quitted his prey, to save his life, and "escaped with eight men," ver. 15. It seems, two of his ten men, that were his banditti or assistants, spoken of, ver. 1, either deserted him or were killed in the engagement; but he made the best of his way to the Ammonites, as a perfect renegado, that had quite abandoned all relation to the commonwealth of Israel, though he was of the seed royal, and we hear no more of him.

RESOLUTION TO MARCH TO EGYPT.—Ver. 17. Nothing would serve them but they would "go to enter into Egypt," and, in order to that, they encamped for a time "in the habitation of Chimham, by Bethlehem," David's city. Probably it was some land which David gave to Chimham, the son of Barzillai, which, though it returned to David's family, at the year of Jubilee, yet still bore the name of "Chimham." Here Johanan made his head-quarters, steering his course toward Egypt, either from a personal affection to that country, or an ancient national confidence in the Egyptians for help in distress. Some "of the mighty men of war," it seems, had escaped; those he took with him, "and the women and children whom he had recovered from Ishmael," who were thus emptied from vessel to vessel, because they were yet unchanged. The reason for this resolution was very frivolous. They pretended that "they were afraid of the Chaldeans," that they would come and do I know not what with them, "because Ishmael had" killed "Gedaliah," ver. 18. I cannot think they really had any apprehensions of danger upon this account; for though it is true that the Chaldeans had cause enough to resent the murder of their viceroy, yet they were not so unreasonable, or unjust, as to revenge it upon those who appeared so vigorously against the murderers. But they only made use of this as a seam to cover the corrupt inclination of their unbelieving ancestors, which was so strong in them, "to return into Egypt." Those will justly lose their comfort in real fears, that excuse themselves in sin with pretended fears.

CHAP. XLII. JEREMIAH CONSULTED BY THE REMNANT.—Ver. 1—3. They desire him by prayer to ask direction from God what they should do in the present critical juncture. They express themselves wonderfully well. 1. With great respect to the prophet. Though he was poor and low, and under their command, yet they apply themselves to him with humility and submissiveness, as petitioners for his assistance, which yet they intimate unworthiness of; "Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee." They compliment him thus, in hopes to persuade him as they would have him say. 2. With a great opinion of his interest in heaven; "'Pray for us,' who know not how to pray for ourselves.' 'Pray to the Lord thy God,' for we are unworthy to call him ours, nor have we reason to expect any favour from him." 3. With a great sense of their need of divine direction. They speak of themselves as objects of compassion; "'We are but a remnant, but a few of many;' how easily will such a rem-

5 Then they said to Jeremiah, [l]The LORD be a true and faithful witness between us, [m]if we do not even according to all things for the which the LORD thy God shall send thee to us.

6 Whether [n]it be good, or whether it be evil,[2] we will obey the voice of the LORD our God, to whom we send thee; [o]that it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the LORD our God.

7 ¶ And it came to pass [p]after ten days, that the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah.

8 Then called he [q]Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces which were with him, and all the people, from the least even to the greatest,

9 And said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, [r]unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication before him;

10 If ye will still abide in this land, [s]then will I build you, and not pull you down, and I will plant you, and not pluck you up: for [t]I repent me[3] of the evil that I have done unto you.

11 Be not [u]afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid; be not afraid of him, saith the LORD: [x]for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand.

12 And I will shew mercies unto you, [y]that he may have mercy upon you,[4] and cause you to return to your own land.

13 But [z]if ye say, We will not dwell in this land, neither obey the voice of the LORD your God,

14 Saying, No; but [a]we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor have hunger of bread; and there will we dwell:

15 And now therefore hear the word of the LORD, ye remnant of Judah; Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [b]If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there;

16 Then it shall come to pass, [c]that the sword, which ye feared, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt; and the famine, whereof ye were afraid, shall [†]follow close after you there in Egypt; and [d]there ye shall die.

17 So shall [‡]it be with all the men that set their faces to go into Egypt, to sojourn there; [e]they shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: and [f]none of them shall remain or escape from the evil that I will bring upon them.

18 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [g]As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; so shall my fury be poured forth upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt: and [h]ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach; [i]and ye shall see this place no more.

19 ¶ The LORD hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah,[5] [k]Go ye not into Egypt:[6] [l]know certainly that I have [§]admonished you this day.

20 For [m]ye [l]dissembled in your hearts, when ye sent me unto the LORD your God, saying, [n]Pray for us unto the LORD our God; and according unto all that the LORD our God shall say, so declare unto us, and we will do it.

21 And now [o]I have this day declared it to you; [p]but ye have not obeyed the voice of the LORD your God, nor any thing for the which he hath sent me unto you.

22 Now therefore [q]know certainly that ye shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, in the place whither ye desire to go and to sojourn.

CHAP. XLIII.

Johanan carrieth Jeremiah into Egypt, 1. Jeremiah propliesieth the conquest of Egypt by the Babylonians, 8.

AND it came to pass, that when Jeremiah [a]had made an end of speaking unto all the people [b]all the words of the LORD their God, for which the LORD their God had sent him to them, even all these words,

2 Then spake [c]Azariah the son of Hoshaiah,[1] and [d]Johanan the son of Kareah, and [e]all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, [f]Thou speakest falsely; the LORD our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there:

3 But [g]Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for [h]to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put us to death, and carry us away captive into Babylon.

4 So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, [i]obeyed not the voice of the LORD, [k]to dwell in the land of Judah;

5 But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, [l]took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah;

6 Even men, and women, and children, and [m]the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, [n]and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7 So they came into the land of Egypt: for they obeyed not the voice of the LORD. Thus came they even to [o]Tahpanhes.

8 ¶ Then [p]came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying,

9 Take [q]great stones in thine hand, and hide them in the clay in the brick-kiln,[2] which nant be swallowed up, and yet it is pity that it should. 'Thine eyes' see what distress we are in, what a plunge we are at; if thou canst do any thing, help us." 4. With desire of divine direction; "Let 'the Lord thy God' take this ruin into his thoughts, and under his hand, and 'show us the way wherein we may walk,' and may expect to have his presence with us, and 'the thing that we may do,' the course we may take for our own safety." Note, In every difficult, doubtful case, our eye must be up to God for direction. They then might expect to be directed by a "spirit of prophecy," which is now ceased; but we may still in faith pray to be guided by a "spirit of wisdom" in our hearts, and the hints of Providence.

THE PROPHET'S REPLY.—Ver. 10. The prophet assures them that it is the will of God that they would stay where they were; and his promise, that if they do so, it shall undoubtedly be "well with them;" he would have them still to "abide in this land." Their brethren were forced out of it into captivity, and it was their affliction; let them therefore count it a mercy that they may stay in it, and a duty to stay in it. Let those whose lot is in Canaan, never quit it while they can keep it. It had been enough to oblige them, if God had only said, "I charge you upon your allegiance, to 'abide still in the land;'" but he rather persuades them to it as a Friend than commands it as a Prince. He expresses also a very tender concern for them in their present calamitous condition; "It repenteth me of the evil that I have done unto you." Though they had shown small sign of their repenting of their sins, yet God, as one "grieved for the misery of Israel," Judg. x. 16, begins to repent of the judgments he had brought upon them for their sins. Not that he changed his mind, but he was very ready to change his way, and to return in mercy to them. God's time to repent himself concerning his servants is when he sees that, as here, their strength is gone, and "there is none shut up or left," Deut. xxxii. 36. He answers the argument they had against "abiding in this land;" they "feared the king of Babylon," chap. xli. 18, lest he should come, and avenge the death of Gedaliah upon them, though they were no way accessary to it, nay, had witnessed against it. The surmise was foreign and unreasonable; but if there had been any ground for it, enough is here said to remove it, ver. 11. "'Be not afraid of the king of Babylon,' though he is a man of great might and little mercy, and a very arbitrary prince, whose will is a law, and therefore you are afraid he will, upon this pretence, though without colour of reason, take advantage against you; 'be not afraid of him,' for I am with you to save you, who can be against you to hurt you?" Thus has God [illegible] for the fear will bring a snare; fear not him, "for I am with you," [illegible] and silence even the causeless fears of his people, which discourage [illegible] enough in the enemies to do it.

HIS FURTHER REMONSTRANCE.—Ver. 15. "'Hear the word of the Lord, ye remnant of Judah,' who think that because you are a remnant, you must be spared of course, ver. 2, and indulged in your own humour." 1. Did the sword and famine frighten them? Those very judgments shall pursue them into Egypt, shall overtake them, and overcome them, there, ver. 16, 17. "You think, because war and famine have long been raging in this land, that they are entailed upon it; whereas if you trust in God, he can make even this land a land of peace to you; you think they are confined to it, and if you can get clear of this land, you shall get out of the reach of them, but God will send them after you wherever you go." Note, The evils we think to escape by sin, we certainly and inevitably run ourselves upon. The men that go to Egypt, in contradiction to God's will, to escape "the sword and famine," shall "die in Egypt by sword and famine." We may apply it to the common calamities of human life; those that are impatient of them, and think to avoid them by changing their place, will find that they are deceived, and that they do not at all mend themselves; the grievances common to men will meet them wherever they go; all our removes in this world are but from one wilderness to another; still we are where we were.—Henry.

CHAP. XLIII. THE MARCH TO EGYPT, AND THE PROPHECY OF JEREMIAH IN TAHPANHES.—Ver. 2, 3. "'Proud men.' Who refused to obey almighty God, when his command crossed their inclinations. 'Hath not spoken.' The constant method of hypocrites and infidels, who pretend that they are not satisfied of the truth of divine revelation; when the true cause of their unbelief is, that God's commands contradict their own lusts and appetites. 'Baruch.' They would not directly accuse Jeremiah; but they lay the blame on Baruch." [Lowth.]—The princes had previously made up their minds, at all events, to go into Egypt; and therefore they were of course decidedly averse to Jeremiah's counsel, because proudly attached to their own will and wisdom; and doubtless they were also exasperated by his severe language and awful warnings. They were not, however, willing to allow, that they acted in direct defiance of God's authority; they pretended therefore, and perhaps persuaded themselves, that Jeremiah was influenced by Baruch to oppose their projects, that they might fall into the hands of the Chaldeans. Their suspicions of Baruch were doubtless ill-grounded; for he was a very pious man, and a steady friend to his people; but Jeremiah's character was so established; he had so long shown a patient disinterested love to his nation, and so many of his predictions had already been fulfilled; that their accusation of him was as foolish as it was malicious. His late preference of a [illegible] and princes of Babylon, [illegible]

The desolation of Judah for idolatry, 1. The Jews' obstinacy, 15, threatened, 20. The destruction of Egypt foreshewn.

THE word that came to Jeremiah [a]concerning all the Jews which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at [b]Migdol,[1] and at [c]Tahpanhes, and at [d]Noph, and in the country of [e]Pathros, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [f]Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day they are [g]a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein;

3 Because [h]of their wickedness which they have committed, to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other [i]gods, whom they knew not, neither they, ye, nor your fathers.

4 Howbeit [k]I sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early and sending them, saying, Oh, do not [l]this abominable thing that I hate.

5 But [m]they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to [n]burn no incense unto other gods.

6 Wherefore [o]my fury and mine anger was poured forth, and was kindled in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem; and they are [p]wasted and desolate, as at this day.

7 Therefore now thus saith the LORD, the God of hosts, the God of Israel, Wherefore commit ye this great evil [q]against your souls, to cut off from you [r]man and woman, child [s]and suckling, out of *Judah, [t]to leave you none to remain;

8 In that [u]ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell, [x]that ye might cut yourselves off, and that ye might be [y]a curse and a reproach among all the nations of the earth?

9 Have [z]ye forgotten the wickedness of your fathers, and the [†]wickedness of the kings of Judah, and the wickedness of their wives, and your own wickedness, and [a]the wickedness of your wives, which they have committed in the land of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

10 They [b]are not [‡]humbled even unto this day, [c]neither have they feared, nor walked in my law, nor in my statutes, that I set before you, and before your fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, [d]I will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah.

12 And [e]I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed, and fall in the land of Egypt; they shall even be consumed by the sword and by the famine: they shall die, from the least even unto the greatest, by the sword and by the famine; [f]and they shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach.

13 For [g]I will punish them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have punished Jerusalem, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence:

14 So that none of the remnant of Judah, which are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the [h]which they [§]have a desire to return to dwell there: [i]for none shall return but such as shall escape.

15 ¶ Then [k]all the men which knew that their wives had burned incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros,[2] answered Jeremiah, saying,

16 As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the LORD, [l]we will not hearken unto thee:

17 But we will certainly do [m]whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the [l]queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings[3] unto her, [n]as we have done, we, and [o]our fathers, our kings, and our princes, [p]in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for [q]then had we plenty of *victuals, and were well, and saw no evil.

Johanan and the captains and soldiers seem to have compelled the people in general, as well as Jeremiah and Baruch, to accompany them into Egypt. This aggravated their impiety and rebellion; as they carried away those into that idolatrous country, (which had always proved treacherous to Israel,) who had returned from other nations, out of affection, to the land of Judah. When they arrived in Egypt, they repaired immediately to the royal city, where, it is probable, they were favourably received by Pharaoh. Ver. 8—13. The Jews had sheltered themselves in Egypt, to be out of the reach of the Chaldeans: but they were no sooner arrived there, than the prophet was instructed to inform them, that Nebuchadnezzar would pursue them, and that Pharaoh would not be able to protect them. This prediction was attended by a sign, that it might be the more noticed. It was also predicted that Nebuchadnezzar would destroy great numbers of the Egyptians, and take many of them prisoners; that he would add Egypt to his dominions, and possess himself of the spoil of it, with the utmost speed; with as much ease as a shepherd puts on his garment.—("This shows the prodigious ease with which all the power and riches of a kingdom are carried away, when God appoints the revolution.") [Rollin.]—That he would return to his own land in peace, none daring to resist him; and that he would burn their temples and idols, to which the Egyptians were attached beyond other nations, and which tempted the Jews also to idolatry. And especially that he would break the images of Beth-shemesh, (the house of the sun,) in the land of Egypt; for there was a city of that name in the land of Judah.—Scott.

CHAP. XLIV. RELAPSE OF THE JEWS TO IDOLATRY IN EGYPT.—Ver. 8. The prophet says to them, You "burn your incense to other gods in the land of Egypt; therefore" God forbade them to go into Egypt, because he knew it would be a snare to them. Those whom God sent into the land of the Chaldeans, though that was an idolatrous country, were there, by the power of God's grace, weaned from idolatry; but those who went against God's mind into the land of the Egyptians, were there, by the power of their own corruptions, more wedded than ever to their idolatries; for when we thrust ourselves, without cause or call, into places of temptation, it is just with God to leave us to ourselves. In doing this, 1. They did a great deal of injury to themselves and their families; "'You commit this great evil against your souls,' ver. 7, you wrong them, you deceive them with that which is false, you destroy them, for it will be fatal to them." Note, In sinning against God, we sin against our own souls. "It is the ready way to 'cut yourselves off' from all comfort and hope, ver. 8, to cut off your name and honour; so that you will, both by your sin and by your misery, become 'a curse and a reproach among all nations.' It will become a proverb, As wretched as a Jew. It is the ready way 'to cut off from you' all your relations, all that you should have joy of, and have your families built up in, 'man and woman, child and suckling,' so that Judah shall be a land lost for want of heirs." 2. They filled up the measure of the iniquity of their fathers, and, as if that had been too little for them, added to it, ver. 9. "'Have you forgotten the wickedness' of those who are gone before you, that you are not humbled for it as you ought to be, and afraid of the consequences of it?" "Have you forgotten the punishments of your fathers?" So some read it. "Do you not know how dear their idolatry cost them? And yet dare you continue in that vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers, though you received the curse with it?" He reminds them of the sins and punishments "of the kings of Judah," who, great as they were, escaped not the judgments of God for their idolatry; yea, and they should have taken warning by "the wickedness of their wives," who had seduced them to idolatry. In the original it is, "And of his wives," which, Dr. Lightfoot thinks, tacitly reflects upon Solomon's wives, particularly his Egyptian wives, to whom the idolatry "of the kings of Judah" owed its original. "Have you forgotten this, and what came of it, that you dare venture upon the same wicked courses?" See Neh. xiii. 18, 26. "Nay, to come to your own times, 'Have you forgotten your own wickedness and the wickedness of your wives,' when you lived in prosperity in Jerusalem, and what ruin it brought upon you? But, alas! to what purpose do I speak to them?" (says God to the prophet, ver. 10.) "'They are not humbled, unto this day,' by all the humbling providences that they have been under. 'They have not feared nor walked in my law.'" Note, Those that walk not in the law of God, thereby show that they are destitute of the fear of God.

MISERABLE INFATUATION OF THE IDOLATERS.—Ver. 16, 17. 1. They plead antiquity: We are resolved "to burn incense to the queen of heaven," for "our fathers" did so; it is a practice that pleads prescription; and why should we pretend to be wiser than our fathers? 2. They plead authority; they that had power practised it themselves, and prescribed it to others; "Our kings and our princes" did it, whom God set over us, and who were of the seed of David. 3. They plead unity; it was not here and there one that did it, but "we," we all with one consent, we that are a great multitude, ver. 15, we did it. 4. They plead universality; it was not done here and there, but "in the cities of Judah." 5. They plead visibility; it was not done in a corner, in dark and shady groves only, but "in the streets," openly and publicly. 6. They plead that it was the practice of the mother-church, the holy see; it was not now learned first in Egypt, but it had been done in "Jerusalem." 7. They plead prosperity; "then had we plenty of" bread, "and" of all good things, we "were well, and saw no evil." All the former pleas, I fear, were too true in fact; God's witnesses against their idolatry were few and hid; offerings unto her, [r]we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine.

19 And when we burned incense to the queen of heaven, and poured out drink-offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink-offerings unto her, without our men?[s]

20 Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the people which had given him that answer, saying,

21 The incense that ye burned in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, did not the LORD remember them, and came it not into his mind?

22 So that the LORD could no longer bear,[t] because of the evil of your doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is your land a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day.

23 Because ye have burned incense, and because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed the voice of the LORD, nor walked in his law, nor in his statutes, nor in his testimonies; therefore this evil is happened unto you, as at this day.

24 Moreover, Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, [a]Hear the word of the LORD, [b]all Judah that are in the land of Egypt;

25 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, [c]Ye and your wives have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, saying, [d]We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her: ye will surely accomplish your vows, and surely perform your vows.

26 Therefore hear ye the word of the LORD, all Judah that dwell in the land of Egypt; Behold, [e]I have sworn by my great name, saith the LORD, [f]that my name shall no more be named[7] in the mouth of any man of Judah in all the land of Egypt, saying, [g]The Lord GOD liveth.

27 Behold, I [h]will watch over them for evil, and not for good; and all the men of Judah that are in the land of Egypt [i]shall be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them.

28 Yet [k]a small number that escape the sword shall return out of the land of [l]Egypt into the land of Judah; and all the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose word shall stand, mine, or theirs.

Elijah thought that he was left alone: and this last might perhaps be true as to some particular persons, but as to their nation, they were still under rebukes for their rebellions, and there was "no peace to them that went out or came in," 2 Chron. xv. 5. But, supposng all to be true, yet this does not at all excuse them from idolatry; it is the law of God that we must be ruled and judged by, not the practice of men.

THREATENED PUNISHMENT.—Ver. 24—30. Now God, in his reply, tells them plainly, 1. That since they were fully determined to persist in their idolatry, God was fully determined to proceed in his controversy with them; if they would go on to provoke him, he would go on to punish them, and see which would get the better at last. God repeats what they had said. "Well (says God,) 'you will accomplish, you will perform, your' wicked 'vows:' now hear what is my vow, what 'I have sworn by my great name,'" and if "the Lord hath sworn," he "will not repent," since they have sworn and will not repent; "with the froward he will show himself froward," Ps. xviii. 25. He hath sworn. (1.) That what little remains of religion there were among them, should be lost. Though they joined with the Egyptians in their idolatries, yet they continued upon many occasions to make mention of the name of Jehovah, particularly in their solemn oaths; they said, "Jehovah liveth," he "is the living God," so they owned him to be, though they worshipped dead idols; they swear, "The Lord liveth," chap. v. 2; but I fear they retained this form of swearing more in honour of their nation than of their God; but God declares that his "name shall no more be" thus "named" by "any man of Judah in all the land of Egypt," that there shall be no Jews remaining to use this dialect of their country, or, if there be, they shall have forgotten it, and shall learn to swear, as the Egyptians do, "by the life of Pharaoh," not of Jehovah. (2.) He hath sworn, that what little remnant of people there was there, shall all be consumed. "I will watch over them for evil;" no opportunity shall be let slip to bring some judgment upon them, "until there be an end of them," and they be quite rooted out. Note, To those whom God finds impenitent sinners, he will be found an implacable Judge. And when it comes to this, they "shall know whose word shall stand, mine, or theirs." They said that they should recover themselves, when they returned to worship "the queen of heaven:" God says that they should ruin themselves; and now the event will show which was in the right. The contest between God and sinners is, whose word shall stand, whose will shall be done, who shall get the better. Sinners say that they shall have peace, though they go on; God says they shall have no peace. But "when God judges, he will overcome;" God's word shall stand, and not the sinner's. 2. He tells them that a very few of them should "escape the sword," and in process of time "return into the land of Judah," a "small number," next to none, in comparison with the great numbers that should return out of the land of the Chaldeans. This seems designed to upbraid those who boasted of their numbers that concurred in sin; there were none to speak of, that did not join in idolatry; "Well," says God, "and there shall be as few 'that' shall 'escape the sword and famine.'" 3. He gives them a sign that all these threatenings shall be accomplished in their season, that they shall be consumed here in Egypt, and shall quite perish: "Pharaoh-hophrah," the present "king of Egypt," shall be delivered "into the hand of his enemies that seek his life; of his own rebellious subjects," (so some,) under Amasis, who usurped his throne; "of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon," (so others,) who invaded his kingdom; the former is related by Herodotus, the latter by Josephus.—Henry.

CHAP. XLV. GOD'S MESSAGE TO BARUCH.—Ver. 4, 5. This message, though inserted subsequently to the narrative of the destruction of Jerusalem, was sent to Baruch long before, at the time when his mind was greatly discomposed. Being a man of learning and ingenuity, it seems he had formed expectations of obtaining preferment, and was "seeking great things for himself." He had perhaps hoped that the predicted judgments would not happen in his time; and that, by prudence and activity, he should obtain the favour of his superiors. For this the Lord rebuked him: "Dost thou aspire to honour and dignity in a time of common calamity?" [Lowth.]—God was about to break down the city and temple; to pluck up the people from the land in which he had planted them; and to make dreadful destruction upon the Jews and neighbouring nations: and was this a time for one of his servants to seek great things for himself? This was (as one expresses it) "like painting his own cabin, whilst the ship was sinking."—Scott.

CHAP. XLVI. EGYPTIAN EXPEDITION.—Ver. 2—4. The Egyptians are upbraided with the mighty preparations they made for this expedition, in which the prophet calls to them to do their utmost, for so they would; "Come, then, 'order the buckler,' let the weapons of war be got ready." Egypt was famous for "horses," let them be harnessed," and the cavalry well mounted; "Get up ye horsemen, and stand forth," &c. See what preparations the children of men make, with abundance of care and trouble, and at a vast expense, to kill one another, as if they did not die fast enough of themselves! he compares their marching out upon this expedition to the rising of their river Nile, ver. 7, 8. "Egypt now rises up like a flood," scorning to keep within its own banks, and threatening to overflow all the neighbouring lands; it is a very formidable army that the Egyptians bring into the field upon this occasion; the prophet summons them, ver. 9. "Come up, ye horses; rage, ye chariots;" he challenges them to bring 14 Declare ye in Egypt, and publish in [d]Migdol, and publish in Noph, and in Tahpanhes: say ye, [e]Stand fast, and prepare thee; for [f]the sword shall devour round about thee.

15 Why are [g]thy valiant men swept away? they stood not, because the LORD did drive them.

16 He [‖]made many to fall, yea, [h]one fell upon another; and [‖]they said, Arise, and let us go again to our own people, and to the land of our nativity, from the oppressing sword.

17 They did cry there, [k]Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise; he hath passed the time appointed.

18 As I live, [l]saith the King, whose name is The LORD of hosts, Surely as [m]Tabor is among the mountains, and as [n]Carmel by the sea, so shall he come.

19 O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt, [*]furnish thyself to [o]go into captivity: for [p]Noph shall be [q]waste and desolate without an inhabitant.

20 Egypt is like [s]a very fair heifer,[4] but destruction cometh; [t]it cometh out of the north.

21 Also her hired men are in the midst of her like [†]fatted bullocks; for they also are turned back, and are fled away together: [y]they did not stand, because [z]the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation.

22 The voice thereof shall go like a serpent; for they shall march with an army, and come against her with axes, as hewers of wood.

23 They shall cut down her forest, saith the LORD, though it cannot be searched; because they are more than the grasshoppers, and are innumerable.

24 The daughter of Egypt shall be confounded: she shall be delivered into the hand of the people of the north.

25 The LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saith; Behold, I will punish [‡]the multitude of [§]No,[5] and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings; even Pharaoh, [k]and all them that trust in him:

26 And [‖]I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of his servants; [m]and afterward it shall be inhabited, as in the days of old, saith the LORD.

27 ¶ But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob,[6] and be not dismayed, O Israel: for, behold, [o]I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, [p]and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid.

28 Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the LORD: [q]for I am with thee; for I will [r]make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; [s]but I will not make a full end of thee, but [t]correct thee in measure; yet will I [§]not leave thee wholly unpunished.

CHAP. XLVII.

The destruction of the Philistines.

THE word of the LORD that came to Jeremiah the prophet [a]against the Philistines, before that Pharaoh smote *Gaza.

2 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, waters rise up out of the north, and shall be an overflowing flood, and shall overflow the land, and [†]all that is therein; the city, and them that dwell therein: then the men shall cry, and all the inhabitants of the land shall howl.

3 At the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses, at the rushing of his chariots, and at the rumbling of his wheels, the fathers shall not look back to their children, for feebleness of hands,

4 Because of the day that cometh to spoil all the Philistines, and to cut off from [h]Tyrus[1]

all their confederate troops together, "the Ethiopians," that descended from the same stock with the Egyptians, Gen. x. 6, and were their neighbours and allies; "the Libyans and Lydians," both seated in Africa, to the west of Egypt, and from them the Egyptians fetched their auxiliary forces: let them strengthen themselves with all the art and interest they have, yet it shall be all in vain, they shall be shamefully defeated notwithstanding, for God will fight against them, and against him "there is no wisdom, nor counsel," Prov. xxi. 30, 31. It concerns them that go forth to war, not only to "order the buckler" and "harness the horses," but to repent of their sins, and pray to God for his presence with them, and that they may have it to keep themselves from every wicked thing. They are also upbraided with the great expectations they had from this expedition, which were quite contrary to what God intended in bringing them together.

OVERTHROW OF THE EGYPTIAN HOST.—Ver. 20—25. The desolation of Egypt is foretold, and the waste that should be made of that rich country. "Egypt is" now "like a very fair heifer," or calf, fat and shining, and not "accustomed to the yoke" of subjection; wanton as a heifer that is well fed, and very sportful. Some think here is an allusion to Apis, the bull or calf which the Egyptians worshipped, from whom the children of Israel learned to "worship the golden calf." Egypt is as fair as a goddess, and adores herself, "but destruction comes; cutting up comes," so some read it; "it comes out of the north;" thence the Chaldean soldiers shall come, as so many butchers or sacrificers, to kill and cut up this "fair heifer." 1. The Egyptians shall be brought down, shall be tamed, and their tune changed. "The daughters of Egypt shall be confounded," shall be filled with astonishment; "their voice shall go like a serpent," it shall be very low and submissive, they shall not low like a "fair heifer," that makes a great noise, but hiss out of their holes "like serpents." They shall not dare to make loud complaints of the cruelty of the conquerors, but vent their griefs in silent murmurs. They shall not now, as they used to do, answer roughly, but, with "the poor, use entreaties," and beg for their lives. 2. They shall be carried away prisoners into their enemy's land, ver. 19. "'O thou daughter, dwelling' securely and delicately 'in Egypt,' that fruitful, pleasant country, do not think this will last always, but 'furnish thyself to go into captivity;' instead of rich clothes, which will but tempt the enemy to strip thee, get plain and warm clothes; instead of fine shoes, provide strong ones; and inure thyself to hardship, that thou mayest bear it the better." Note, It concerns us, among all our preparation, to prepare for trouble; we provide for the entertainment of our friends, let us not neglect to provide for the entertainment of our enemies, nor among all our furniture omit furniture for captivity. The Egyptians must prepare to flee, for their cities shall be evacuated; Noph particularly "shall be desolate without an inhabitant," so general shall the slaughter and the captivity be. There are some penalties which, we say, the king and the multitude are exempted from, but here even these are obnoxious; "The multitude of No shall be punished;" it is called "populous No," Nah. iii. 8. "Though hand join in hand," yet they shall not escape; nor can any think to get off in the crowd. Be they ever so many, they shall find God will be too many for them. Their kings and all their petty princes shall fall; and their gods too, chap. xliii. 12, 13, their idols and their great men. Those which they call their "tutelar deities," shall be no protection to them. Pharaoh shall be brought down, and "all those that trust in him," particularly the Jews that came to sojourn in his country, trusting in him rather than in God.

COMFORT TO ISRAEL.—Ver. 28. 1. Let the wicked of the earth tremble, they have cause for it; "but fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel;" and again, "Fear thou not, O Jacob." God would not have this people to be a timorous people. 2. The wicked of the earth "shall be put away like dross," not to be looked after any more: but God's people, in order to their being saved, shall be found out and gathered, though they be far off; shall be redeemed, though be held fast in captivity; and shall return. 3. The wicked "is like the troubled sea when it cannot rest," they "flee when none pursues;" but Jacob, being at home in God, "shall be at rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid;" "for what time he is afraid," he has a "God to trust to." 4. The wicked "God beholds afar off;" but wherever thou art, "O Jacob, I am with thee, a very present Help." 5. A "full end shall be made" of the nations that oppressed God's Israel, as Egypt and Babylon; but mercy shall be kept in store for the Israel of God: they shall be corrected, but not cast off, the correction shall be in measure, in respect of degree and continuance. Nations have their periods, the Jewish nation itself is come to an end, as a nation; but the gospel-church, God's spiritual Israel, still continues, and will to the end of time; in that this promise is to have its full accomplishment, that though God correct it, he will never "make a full end of it."—Henry.

CHAP. XLVII. OVERTHROW OF THE PHILISTINES.—As the Egyptians had often proved false friends, so the Philistines had always been sworn enemies, to the Israel of God, and the more dangerous and vexatious for their being such near neighbours to them. They were considerably humbled in David's time, but it seems, they had got head again, and were a considerable people till Nebuchadnezzar cut them off with their neighbours, which is the event here foretold. The date of this prophecy is observable; it was "before Pharaoh" smote Gaza: when this blow was given to Gaza by the king of Egypt is not certain, whether in his expedition against Carchemish, or in his return

5 [m]Baldness is come upon Gaza; Ashkelon is cut off with the remnant of their valley;[2] how long wilt thou cut thyself?

6 O [p]thou sword of the LORD, [r]how long will it be ere thou be quiet? ‡Put up thyself into thy scabbard, rest, and be still.

CHAP. XLVIII.

The judgment of Moab for several corruptions, 1; her restoration, 47.

AGAINST Moab thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Woe unto [b]Nebo! for it is spoiled; Kiriathaim is confounded and taken; *Misgab is confounded and dismayed.

2 There shall be no more praise of Moab: in [d]Heshbon they have devised evil against it; [e]come, and let us cut it off from being a nation: also thou shalt be [†]cut down, O Madmen; the sword shall ‡pursue thee.

3 A voice of crying shall be from Horonaim, spoiling and great destruction.

4 [h]Moab is destroyed; her little ones have caused a cry to be heard.

5 For in the going up of [1]Luhith[1] [§]continual weeping shall go up; for in the going down of Horonaim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction.

6 Flee, save your lives, and be like [‖]the heath in the wilderness.

7 ¶ For [1]because thou hast trusted in thy works,[2] and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken; and [m]Chemosh shall go forth into captivity with [n]his priests and his princes together.

8 And the spoiler shall come upon every city, and no city shall escape: the valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed, as the LORD hath spoken.

9 Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee and get away: for [r]the cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein.

10 [s]Cursed be he that doeth the work of the LORD *deceitfully, and cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood.

11 ¶ Moab hath been at ease from his youth,[3] and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity: therefore his taste [†]remained in him, and his scent is not changed.

12 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will send unto him wanderers that shall cause him to wander, and shall empty his vessels, and break their bottles.

13 And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, [b]as the house of Israel was ashamed of Beth-el[4] their confidence.

14 ¶ How say ye, [d]We are mighty and strong men for the war?

15 Moab is [e]spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and ‡his chosen young men are [f]gone down to the slaughter, saith the King, whose name is the LORD of hosts.

16 The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction hasteth fast.

17 All ye that are about him, [1]bemoan him; and all ye that know his name, say, [k]How is the strong staff broken,[5] and the beautiful rod!

18 Thou daughter that dost inhabit [m]Dibon, come down from thy glory, and sit in thirst; for the spoiler of Moab shall come upon thee, and he shall destroy thy strongholds.

19 O [§]inhabitant of [o]Aroer, stand by the way, and espy; ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, What is done?

20 Moab is confounded; for it is broken down: howl and cry; tell ye it in [r]Arnon, that Moab is spoiled,

21 And judgment is come upon the plain country; upon Holon, and upon [t]Jahazah, and upon Mephaath,

22 And upon [u]Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-diblathaim,

23 And upon [x]Kiriathaim, and upon Beth-gamul, and upon [y]Beth-meon,

24 And upon [z]Kerioth, and upon [a]Bozrah, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab, far or near.

25 The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the LORD.

26 ¶ Make ye him drunken; [e]for he magnified himself against the LORD: Moab also shall [f]wallow in his vomit, and he also shall be in derision.

27 For was not Israel a derision unto thee? was he found among thieves? for since thou spakest of him, thou [‖]skippedst for joy.

28 O ye that dwell in Moab, [k]leave the cities, and dwell in the rock, and be [1]like the dove that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth.[6]

29 ¶ We have heard the pride of Moab, (he is exceeding proud,) his loftiness, and his arrogancy, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart.

30 I [o]know his wrath, saith the LORD: but it shall not be so; *his lies shall not so effect it.

31 Therefore [q]will I howl for Moab, and thence, after he had slain Josiah, or when he afterward came with design to relieve Jerusalem; but this is mentioned here, to show that this word of the Lord came to Jeremiah against the Philistines, when they were in their full strength and lustre, themselves and their cities in good condition, in no peril from any adversary or evil occurrent, when no disturbance of their repose was foreseen by any human probabilities; then Jeremiah foretold their ruin, which "Pharaoh's" smiting Gaza soon after would be but an earnest of, and, as it were, the beginnings of sorrow to that country.—Henry.

CHAP. XLVIII. IDOLATRY OF MOAB.—Ver. 7. The "priests and princes shall go together into captivity." Nay, Chemosh, the god they worship, who, they hope, will protect them, shall share with them in the ruin, his temples shall be laid in ashes, and his image carried away with the rest of the spoil. Now the consequence of all this will be, 1. Great shame and confusion; "Kiriathaim is confounded," and Misgab is so. They shall be ashamed of the mighty boasts they have sometimes made of their cities. "There shall be no more vaunting in Moab concerning Heshbon;" (so it might be read, ver. 2,) they shall no more boast of the strength of that city, when the evil which is designed against it is brought upon it. Nor shall they any more boast of their gods; ver. 13, they "shall be ashamed of Chemosh," ashamed of all the prayers they made to, and all the confidence they put in, that dunghill deity: as "Israel was ashamed of Beth-el," of the golden calf they had at Beth-el, which they confided in as their protector, but were deceived in, for it was not able to save them from the Assyrians; nor shall Chemosh be able to save the Moabites from the Chaldeans. Note, Those that will not be convinced and made ashamed of the folly of their idolatry by the word of God, shall be convinced and made ashamed of it by the judgments of God, when they shall find by woeful experience the utter inability of the gods they have served to do them any service.

CHARACTER OF MOAB.—Ver. 11. 1. It had been long undisturbed; "Moab has been at ease from his youth." It was an ancient kingdom before Israel was, and had enjoyed great tranquillity, though a small country, and surrounded with potent neighbours. God's Israel were afflicted from their youth, Ps. cxxix. 1, 2, but "Moab at ease from his youth." He has "not been emptied from vessel to vessel," has not known any troublesome, weakening changes, but is as wine kept on the lees, and not racked or drawn off, by which it retains its strength and body. He has not been unsettled, nor any way made uneasy; he has not "gone into captivity," as Israel have often done, and yet Moab is a wicked, idolatrous nation, and one of the confederates against "God's hidden ones," Ps. lxxxiii. 6. Note, There are many that persist in unrepented iniquity, and yet enjoy uninterrupted prosperity. 2. They had been as long corrupt and unreformed; He "has settled on his lees," he has been secure and sensual in his prosperity, has rested in it, and fetched all the strength and life of the soul from it, as the wine from the lees; his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed; he is still the same, as bad as ever he was. Note, While bad people are as happy as they used to be in the world, it is no marvel if they are as bad as they used to be. They have no changes of their peace and prosperity, "therefore they fear not God," their hearts and lives are unchanged, Ps. lv. 19.

DESTRUCTION OF MOAB.—Ver. 16—20. "Moab is spoiled," quite spoiled, is "confounded and broken down;" their cities are laid in ashes, or seized by the enemy, so that they are forced to quit them, ver. 15. Divers cities are here named, upon which judgment is come, and the list concludes with an et cetera. What occasion was there for him to mention more particulars, when it comes "upon all the cities of Moab" in general, "far and near?" ver. 21—24. Note, When iniquity is universal, we have reason to expect that calamity should be so too. The kingdom is deprived of its dignity and authority; "The horn of Moab is cut off," the horn of its strength and power, both offensive and defensive; "his arm is broken," that he can neither give a blow, nor save a blow, ver. 25. Is the youth of the kingdom the strength and beauty of it? "His chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter," ver. 15. They went down to the battle, promising themselves that they should return victorious; but God told them that they went "down to the slaughter;" so sure are they to fall against whom God fights! In a word, "Moab shall be destroyed from being a people," ver. 42. Those that are enemies to God's people will soon be made no people.

LAMENTATION IN MOAB.—The Moabites shall lament; it will be the greatest mortification and grief imaginable to them. Those that sat in "glory," in the midst of wealth and mirth, and all manner of pleasure, shall "sit in thirst," in a dry and thirsty land, where no water, no comfort, is, ver. 18. It is time for them to "sit in thirst," and inure themselves to hardship, when "the spoiler is come," who will strip them of all, and empty them. The Moabites in the remote corners of the country, that are furthest from the danger, will be inquisitive how the matter goes, what news from the army, will ask every one "that escapes, What is done?" ver. 19. And when they are told that all is gone, that the invader is the conqueror, they will "howl and cry," in bitterness and anguish of spirit, ver. 20, they will abandon themselves to solitude, to lament the desolations of their country, they will "leave the cities" that used to be full of mirth, "and dwell in the rock," where they may have their fill of melancholy; they shall no more be singing birds, but mourning birds, "like the dove," ver. 28, "the doves of the valleys," Ezek.

I will cry out for all Moab; mine heart shall mourn for the men of [r]Kir-heres.

32 O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of [t]Jazer: thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach even to the sea of Jazer: [u]the spoiler is fallen upon thy summer-fruits, and upon thy vintage.

33 And [x]joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab; and I have [y]caused wine to fail from the wine-presses; none shall tread with shouting; their shouting shall be no shouting.[7]

34 From [z]the cry of Heshbon even unto [a]Elealeh, and even unto [b]Jahaz, have they uttered their voice, from [c]Zoar even unto Horonaim, as an heifer of three years old: for the waters also of [d]Nimrim shall be [†]desolate.

35 Moreover, I will cause to cease in Moab,[8] saith the LORD, [e]him that offereth in the high places, and him that burneth incense to his gods.

36 Therefore [f]mine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes, and mine heart shall sound like pipes for the men of [g]Kir-heres: because [h]the riches that he hath gotten are perished.

37 For every head shall be bald, and every beard [‡]clipped: upon all the hands shall be [k]cuttings,[9] and [l]upon the loins sackcloth.

38 There shall be lamentation generally upon all the house-tops of Moab, and in the streets thereof: for I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure, saith the LORD.

39 They shall howl, saying, How is it broken down! how hath Moab turned the [§]back with shame! so shall Moab be [p]a derision and a dismaying to all them about him.

40 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, he shall fly as an eagle, and shall [r]spread his wings over Moab.

41 *Kerioth is taken, and the strongholds are surprised, and the mighty men's hearts in Moab at that day shall be [s]as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

42 And Moab shall be destroyed [t]from being a people, because he hath [u]magnified himself against the LORD.

43 [x]Fear, and the pit, and the snare, shall be upon thee, O inhabitant of Moab, saith the LORD.

44 He [y]that fleeth from the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that getteth up out of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for I will bring upon it, even upon Moab, [z]the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

45 They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon, because of the force: but [a]a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from the midst of Sihon,[10] and shall [b]devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the [‖]tumultuous ones.

The judgment of the Ammonites, 1, of Edom, 7, of Damascus, 23, of Kedar, 38, of Hazor, 30, and of Elam, 34.

*CONCERNING [a]the Ammonites,[1] thus saith the LORD; Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth [†]their king [b]inherit Gad, and his people dwell in his cities?

2 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, [c]that I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters shall be burned with fire: then [f]shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs, saith the LORD.

3 Howl, O Heshbon, for Ai is spoiled:[2] cry, ye daughters of Rabbah, gird you with sackcloth; lament, and run to and fro by the hedges: for [‡]their king [k]shall go into captivity, and his priests and his princes together.

4 Wherefore gloriest thou in the valleys, [§]thy flowing valley, [m]O backsliding daughter? that [n]trusted in her treasures, saying, Who shall come unto me?

5 Behold, [p]I will bring a fear upon thee, saith the Lord GOD of hosts, from all those that be about thee; and [q]ye shall be driven out every man right forth; and [r]none shall gather up him that wandereth.

6 And [s]afterward I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the LORD.

7 ¶ Concerning Edom,[3] thus saith the LORD of hosts, [u]Is wisdom no more in [x]Teman? [4] is counsel perished from the prudent? is their wisdom vanished?

8 Flee ye, [‖]turn back, dwell deep, O inhabitants of [a]Dedan; [b]for I will bring the calamity of Esau upon him, the time that I will visit him.

9 If grape-gatherers come to thee, would they not leave some gleaning grapes? if thieves by night, they will destroy [*]till they have enough.

vii. 16. Let those that give themselves up to mirth know that God can soon change their note. Their sorrow shall be so very extreme, that they shall make themselves "bald, and cut" themselves, ver. 37, which were expressions of a desperate grief, such as tempted men to be even their own destroyers. "Job," indeed, "rent his mantle and shaved his head," but he did not cut himself. When the flood of passion rises ever so high, wisdom and grace must set bounds to it, set banks to it, to restrain it from such barbarities. The sorrow shall be universal; ver. 38. "There shall be a general lamentation upon all the house-tops of Moab," where they worshipped their idols, to whom they shall in vain bemoan themselves, "and in" all "the streets," where they conversed with one another, for they shall be free in communicating their griefs and fears, and in propagating them; for they see all lost; "'I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure,' which shall not be regarded, and cannot be pieced again." That which Moab used to rejoice in, was, their pleasant fruits, and the abundance of their rich wines.

PRIDE OF MOAB.—Ver. 29. The sin which they had been most notoriously guilty of, and for which God now reckoned with them, was pride. It is mentioned six times. "We have" all "heard of the pride of Moab;" his neighbours took notice of it, it has testified to his face, as Israel's did, "he is exceeding proud," and grows worse and worse. Observe "his loftiness, his arrogancy, his pride, his haughtiness;" the multiplying of words to the same purport, intimates in how many instances he discovered his pride, and how offensive it was both to God and man. It was charged upon them, Isa. xvi 6, but here it is expressed more largely than there. Since then, they had been under humbling providences, and yet were unhumbled; nay, they grew more arrogant and haughty, which plainly marked them for that utter destruction of which pride is the forerunner. Two instances are here given of the pride of Moab: 1. He had conducted himself insolently toward God. He must be brought down with shame, ver. 26, for "he" has "magnified himself against the Lord;" and again, ver. 42, he "shall be destroyed from being a people," for this very reason; the Moabites preferred Chemosh before Jehovah, and thought themselves a match for the God of Israel, whom they set at defiance. 2. He had conducted himself scornfully toward Israel, particularly in their late troubles; therefore Moab shall fall into the same troubles, into the same hands, and be a derision, for Israel was "a derision to him," ver. 26, 27. The generality of the Moabites, when they heard of the calamities and desolations of their neighbours the Jews, instead of lamenting them, rejoiced in them as if they had been "thieves" taken in the act of robbing; as often as they spake of them, "they skipped for joy." Many, in such a case, entertained in their minds a secret pleasure at the fall of those they had a dislike to, who yet have so much discretion as to conceal it, it is so invidious a thing; but the Moabites industriously proclaimed their joy, and avowed the enmity they had to Israel, triumphing over every Israelite they met with in distress, and laughing at him; which was as inhuman as it was impious, and an impudent affront both to man, whose nature they were of, and to God, whose name they were called by. Note, Those that deride others in distress will justly and certainly, sooner or later, come into distress themselves, and be had in derision. Those that are "glad at calamities," especially the calamities of God's church, "shall not" long "go unpunished." They had also been guilty of malice against God's people, and treachery in their dealings with them, ver. 30. They made a jest of the desolations of Judah and Jerusalem, and pretended, when they laughed at them, that it was but in sport, and to make themselves merry; but, says God, "'I know his wrath,' I know it comes from the old enmity he has to the seed of Abraham, and the worshippers of the true God. 'I know' he thinks these calamities of the Jewish nation will end in their utter extirpation."—Henry.

CHAP. XLIX. JUDGMENT AGAINST THE AMMONITES.—Ver. 1. The old translation more exactly renders the first clause, "Unto the children of Ammon, thus saith the LORD." The same may be noted concerning the other nations mentioned in this chapter.—The king of Ammon had sent Ishmael to murder Gedaliah, and probably Nebuchadnezzar intended to revenge that injury, when he made war against the Ammonites; but the Lord had a controversy with them on account of their injustice to his people Israel. Being situated on the north-east border of the land, the Ammonites seized every opportunity of getting possession of their cities and lands, as if the Israelites had no heirs: and thus the subjects of the king of Ammon, or the worshippers of Melcom, the idol of Ammon, (so it may be understood,) dwelt in the lot of Gad, and in the cities which God had given to his people, and which had not belonged to their ancestors. It seems that their rapacity was attended with the most shocking barbarity. Even before the Syrians and Assyrians had dispossessed the Israelites, several cities, originally given to Gad or Reuben, were possessed by the Ammonites. Ver. 3. "When Ai, a city of the Ammonites, is destroyed, it is time for Heshbon, the chief city of Moab, to lament her danger; for her turn comes next," chap. xlvii. 2. [Lowth.]—"Howl, O Heshbon, the chief city of the Gadites, (usurped by Ammon,) for Ai, the neighbouring city, is spoiled." [Bp. Hall.]—Heshbon, the capital of Sihon's kingdom, had originally been taken from Moab; and it is generally supposed, that Heshbon of Moab, chap. xlviii. 2, is the same city, the Moabites having again got possession of it.—But it is not certain that another city, called after the name of that which the Amorites took from Moab, might not be intended.—The kingdom of Sihon was divided between Reuben and Gad; Heshbon was at first allotted 26 Therefore [s]her young men shall fall in her streets, and all the men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the LORD of hosts.

27 And [t]I will kindle a fire in the wall of Damascus, and it shall consume the palaces of Ben-hadad.[8]

28 ¶ Concerning [x]Kedar, and concerning the kingdoms [y]of Hazor, which Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon shall smite, thus saith the LORD, Arise ye, go up to Kedar, and [z]spoil the men of the east.[9]

29 Their [b]tents and their flocks shall they take away: they shall take to themselves their curtains, and all their vessels, and their camels; and they shall cry unto them, [c]Fear is on every side.

30 ¶ Flee, [*]get you far off, [f]dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazor, saith the LORD; [g]for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you.

31 Arise, get you up unto the [†]wealthy nation, [h]that dwelleth without care, saith the LORD, which have neither gates nor bars, which [i]dwell alone.

32 And [k]their camels shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil: and [l]I will scatter into all winds them that are [‡]in the utmost corners; and I will bring their calamity from all sides thereof, saith the LORD.

33 And Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever: there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it.

34 ¶ The word of the LORD that came to Jeremiah the prophet against Elam, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, saying, 35 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will [n]break the bow of Elam,[10] the chief of their might.

36 And upon Elam will I bring the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will [q]scatter them toward all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come.

37 For I will cause Elam [r]to be dismayed before their enemies, and before them that seek their life; and I will bring evil upon them, even my fierce anger, saith the LORD; and [s]I will send the sword after them, till I have consumed them:

38 And I will [u]set my throne in Elam,[11] and will destroy from thence the king and princes, saith the LORD.

39 ¶ But it shall come to pass [x]in the latter days, that [y]I will bring again the captivity of Elam, saith the LORD.

to Reuben; but it is afterwards mentioned as a city of Gad. So that either Moab or Ammon had taken it from Reuben or Gad.—Heshbon is mentioned by Isaiah as a city of Moab; as are several others which had been given to Reuben and Gad.

JUDGMENT AGAINST EDOM.—Ver. 9—11. Grape-gatherers generally leave some gleanings; and nocturnal depredators take what they can, yet do not destroy every thing; but the Chaldeans, whom God employed to desolate Edom, would entirely spoil them; they would discover and plunder their secret treasures, and leave them no refuge to hide in; and they would so destroy their seed, and brethren, and neighbours, that there would be none left to say to those that were dying, "Leave thy orphans and widows to my care, and I will provide for them."—This seems the most natural meaning of the passage in this connection; though the latter part of it is generally quoted as a promise to the people of God, when about to leave the world; and some suppose, that it was intended for the afflicted Israelites, to remind them of the advantages which they possessed above the Edomites.—Some indeed understand it ironically, as if no orphans or widows would remain, about whom the dying Edomites need be concerned: but so entire a massacre does not often take place; and such a way of predicting so dire an event, does not accord with the general manner of the holy Scriptures. Ver. 12. The people of God might have expected an exemption from the calamities which overtook his enemies; yet they had been deeply involved in them: and could the Edomites hope to escape?—Not the character, but the peculiar privileges of the Israelites were alluded to. Ver. 16. The word rendered terribleness, is, by some, supposed to mean an idol worshipped by the Idumæans, from which they expected help, but which would disappoint their confidence.—"Jerom, who lived in the neighbourhood, tells us, in his commentary on Obadiah, that Idumea was a rocky mountainous country; and that the inhabitants dwelt in caves dug out of the rocks and hills." [Lowth.] Ver. 19, 20. Nebuchadnezzar was about to come up, (as a lion from the banks of Jordan, when driven from his den by the overflowing waters, he fiercely assaulted the sheepfolds;) and the Lord would cause him suddenly to run upon the land of Edom, though it was strongly fortified; or he would cause the Edomites suddenly to run out of the land, as despairing of success against so powerful an invader. For the Lord had, as it were, summoned all the valiant captains of the earth to appear before him, that he might appoint one to this service; and from them all he had chosen Nebuchadnezzar. And who, like the Lord, was able to prepare instruments to his work? Who dared to appoint him a time, either to meet him in judgment, or to face him in battle? Or what ruler of Edom would dare to withstand Him, and the weapons of his indignation? What shepherd could meet this fierce lion, to defend the sheepfold against him? Let then the Edomites hear the counsel and purpose of God against them; for he meant so to enfeeble and intimidate them, that the least of Nebuchadnezzar's soldiers would be able to draw them out of their cities, and to lead them into captivity.—Scott.

GOD'S CARE OF THE ORPHAN.—Ver. 11. "Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive." When they are flying, or dying, there shall be none left, no relation, no friend, no, not so much as any parish-officers to take care of their wives and children that they leave behind. Edom is not, he is cut off and gone; nor is there any to say, "Leave me thine orphans." If the master of a family be cut off, or forced away, it is some comfort if he have a friend to leave his family with, whom he can confide in; but they shall have none such, for they shall all be involved in the same calamity. The Chaldee makes these to be the words of God to his people, distinguishing them from the Edomites in this calamity; and they read it, "'But you, O house of Israel, you shall not leave your orphans, I will secure them, and let your widows rest on my word.' Whatever becomes of the widows and fatherless of the Edomites, I will take care of yours." Note, It is an unspeakable comfort to the children of God, when they are dying, that they may leave their surviving relations with God, may, in faith, commit them to him, and encourage them to trust in him; and though they cannot promise themselves great things in the world for them, yet they may hope that he will preserve them alive, always provided that they trust in him.

DOOM OF DAMASCUS.—Ver. 23—26. "Damascus" now "waxes feeble;" a city that thought she could have looked the most formidable enemy in the face, now "turns herself to flee," and owns it is to no more purpose to think of contending with her fate, than for "a woman in" labour to contend with her pains, which she cannot escape, but must yield to. It was a "city of praise," ver. 25, not praise to God, but to herself; a city much commended and admired by all strangers that visited it. It was a "city of joy," where there was an affluence and confluence of all the delights of the sons of men, and abundance of mirth in the enjoyment of them. We read it, (though there is no necessity for it,) "the city of my joy," which the prophet himself had sometimes visited with pleasure. Or, it may be the speech of the king lamenting the ruin of "the city of" his "joy." But now it is all overwhelmed with fear and grief. Note, Those deceive themselves who place their happiness in carnal joys; for God in his providence can soon cast a damp upon them, and put an end to them. He can soon make a "city of praise" to be a reproach, and a "city of joy" to be a terror to itself. It ends with a terrible fall and fire. 1. The inhabitants are slain; ver. 26, the "young men," who should fight the enemy, and defend the city, "shall fall" by the sword "in her streets; and all the men of war," mighty men, expert in war, and engaged in the service of their country, "shall

The judgment of Babylon, 1, 9, 21, 35. The redemption of Israel, 4, 17, 33.

THE word that the LORD spake against Babylon, and against the land of the Chaldeans, by *Jeremiah the prophet.

2 Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and †set up a standard; publish, and conceal not: say, [d]Babylon is taken, *Bel is confounded, [f]Merodach is broken in pieces; [g]her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces.

3 For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein: they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4 ¶ In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, [m]the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, [n]going and weeping: they shall go, and [o]seek the LORD their God.

5 They shall ask the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward, saying, [q]Come, and let us join ourselves to the LORD in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten.[1]

6 My [t]people hath been lost sheep; [u]their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away on the mountains: they have gone from mountain to hill, they [y]have forgotten their ‡resting-place.

7 All that found them [z]have devoured them; and their adversaries said, We offend not, because they have sinned against the LORD, [b]the habitation of justice; even the LORD, [c]the hope of their fathers.

8 Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldeans, and be as the he-goats before the flocks.

9 ¶ For, lo, [f]I will raise, and cause to come up, against Babylon, an assembly of great nations from the north country: and [g]they shall set themselves in array against her; from thence she shall be taken: their arrows shall be as of a mighty §expert man; [h]none shall return in vain.

10 And [i]Chaldea shall be a spoil: [k]all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the LORD.

11 Because [l]ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O [m]ye destroyers of mine heritage, because ye are grown ‖fat as the heifer at grass, and *bellow as bulls;

12 Your °mother shall be sore confounded;[2] she that bare you shall be ashamed: behold, the hindermost of the nations shall be [q]a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert.

13 Because of the wrath of the LORD it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate: every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished, and hiss at all her plagues.

14 Put yourselves in array against Babylon round about: all ye that bend the bow, shoot at her, spare no arrows; [u]for she hath sinned against the LORD.

15 Shout against her round about: she hath given her hand: [z]her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down; [a]for it is the vengeance of the LORD: take vengeance upon her; [b]as she hath done, do unto her.

16 Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the †sickle in the time of harvest: for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee every one to his own land.

17 ¶ Israel is *a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away: §first the king of Assyria hath devoured him, and last this Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones.[3]

18 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria.

19 And I will [k]bring Israel again to his habitation, and [l]he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and [m]his soul shall be satisfied upon mount Ephraim and Gilead.

20 In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, [q]the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for [r]I will pardon them whom I reserve.

21 ¶ Go up against the land of ‡Merathaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of §Pekod: waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the LORD, [t]and do according to all that I have commanded thee.

22 A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction.

23 How [x]is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken![4] how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

24 I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, [z]because thou hast striven against the LORD.

25 The LORD hath opened his armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for [b]this is the work of the Lord GOD of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans.

26 Come against her from the ‖utmost border, open her storehouses; *cast her up as heaps, and destroy her utterly: let nothing of her be left.

27 Slay all her bullocks; let them go down to the slaughter: woe unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation.

28 The voice of them that flee and escape out of the land of Babylon, [l]to declare in Zion the vengeance of the LORD our God, the vengeance of his temple.

be cut off." 2. The city is laid in ashes; ver. 27, the "fire" is "kindled" by the besiegers "in the wall," but it shall devour all before it, "the palaces of Benhadad" particularly, where so much mischief had formerly been hatched against God's Israel, for which it is now thus visited.—Henry.

CHAP. L. FATE OF BABYLON.—Ver. 1—3. The fall of Babylon is spoken of as a thing done thoroughly. For, 1. The very idols of Babylon, which the people would protect with all possible care, and from which they expected protection, shall be destroyed. Bel and Merodach were their two principal deities, they shall be "confounded," and the images of them "broken to pieces." 2. The country shall be laid waste, out "of the north;" from Media, which lay north of Babylon, and from Assyria, through which Cyrus made his descent from Babylon; from thence the nation shall come, that shall make "her land desolate." Their land was north of the countries that they destroyed, who were therefore threatened with evil from the north; (Omne malum ab aquilone—Every evil comes from the north;) but God will find out nations yet further north to come upon them. The pomp and power of old Rome were brought down by northern nations, the Goths and Vandals.

UTTER RUIN OF CHALDEA.—Ver. 9—19. The desolation and destruction that shall be brought upon Babylon, are set forth here in a great variety of expressions: 1. The wealth of Babylon shall be a rich and easy prey to the conquerors. "Chaldea shall be a spoil" to all her destroyers, who shall enrich themselves by plundering her, and, which is strange, "all that spoil her shall be satisfied;" they shall have so much, that even they themselves shall say that they have enough. 2. The country of Babylon shall be dispeopled, and lie uninhabited; "It shall be wholly desolate," to that degree, that "every one who goeth by," shall triumph in her fall, and, instead of condoling with them, shall "hiss at all her plagues." 3. Their ancestors shall be ashamed of their cowardice, in fleeing from the first onset; or, "Your mother," Babylon itself, the mother-city, "shall be confounded, when she sees herself deserted by those that should have been her guards. Thus the first ages of Christians may justly be confounded and ashamed to see how unlike them the latter ages are, and how wretchedly they have degenerated; and no sin brings a surer and sorer ruin upon persons or people, than apostacy. 4. The great admirers of Babylon shall see it rendered very despicable: the last of kingdoms, the very tail of the nations, "shall it be, a wilderness, a dry land, a desert." The country that was populous shall be dispeopled, that was enriched with a fertile soil, shall become barren. 5. The great city, the head of it, shall be quite ruined, "her foundations are fallen," and, therefore, "her walls are thrown down;" for how can the walls stand, when divine vengeance is at the door, and shakes the very foundations? It is the vengeance of the Lord, which nothing can contend with, either in law or battle. 6. There shall not be left in Babylon so much as "the poor of the land, for vine-dressers and husbandmen," as there was in Israel. "The sower shall be cut off from Babylon, and he that handles the sickle;" the country shall be so emptied of people, that there shall be none to till the ground, and gather in the fruits of it. Harvest shall come, and there shall be no reapers; seedness shall come, but there shall be no sower; God will do his part, but there shall be no men to do theirs. 7. All their auxiliary forces, which they have hired into their service, shall desert them, as mercenary men often do upon the approach of danger; "for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people." This was threatened before concerning Egypt, chap. xlvi. 16.—Henry.

RETURN OF THE JEWS.—Ver. 4—6. The restoration of the Jews and many Israelites to their own land, was connected with the subversion of the Babylonish monarchy; and the more extensive spread of Christianity, attended with the conversion of the Jews, will be connected with the ruin of the New-Testament Babylon: but some think, that the future conversion of the Jews, and the restoration to their own land, is also predicted. —The people are represented as convinced of their guilt, their duty, and their true interest: so that, weeping for their former sins and for joy on account of their happy deliverance, they go to seek the Lord their God: they determine to leave Babylon and return to Zion, according to the liberty given them by Cyrus. Being unacquainted with the road, they inquire about it, as travellers who have turned their faces thitherward, being already set out and determined to proceed; and they invite their brethren to go with them, and encourage each other to go forward; that on Mount Zion they may join themselves to the Lord, and renew their acceptance and confirmation of his covenant, which was perpetually in force, and obligatory; that (as persuaded he would not fail to perform it with them,) they might engage themselves not to forget to walk with him according to it.—The covenant entered into by Josiah and the people, which was speedily forgotten and violated, may be referred to.—Then the Lord mercifully considers the former sufferings of his people. Their rulers and teachers, who should have fed and tended them, as the flock of God, had occasioned their dispersion by seducing them to idolatry.—"They had turned them aside from the right worship of God at Jerusalem; to sacrifice to idols on mountains and high places." [Lowth.] Thus they were exposed, as lost sheep, to be devoured by their enemies, who were like wolves and lions: and they had not thought of returning to their resting-place, to God and his worship.—Scott.

37 A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots, and upon all the mingled people that are in the midst of her; and they shall become [i]as women:[5] a sword is upon her treasures; and they shall be robbed.

38 A drought is upon [n]her waters; and they shall be dried up: for it is [o]the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols.[6]

39 Therefore [p]the wild beasts of the desert, with the wild beasts of the islands, shall dwell there, and the owls shall dwell therein: and it shall be no more inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation.

40 As [r]God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and the neighbour cities thereof, saith the LORD; so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein.

41 Behold, a people shall come from the north, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

42 They shall hold the bow and the lance: they are cruel, and will not shew mercy: [x]their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon.

43 The [z]king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble: anguish took hold of him, and [a]pangs, as of a woman in travail.

44 Behold, he shall come up [b]like a lion from the swelling of Jordan unto the habitation of the strong: but I will make them suddenly run away from her: and [c]who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and who [‡]will appoint me the time? and [d]who is that shepherd that will stand before me?

45 Therefore [e]hear ye the counsel of the LORD, that he hath taken against Babylon; and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans; Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out; surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them.

46 At the noise of the taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations.

CHAP. LI.

God's severe judgments against Babylon in revenge of Israel.

THUS saith the LORD, Behold, [a]I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the [*]midst of them that [b]rise up against me, [c]a destroying wind;[1]

2 And will send unto Babylon [d]fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for [e]in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about.

3 Against him that bendeth [f]let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his [g]brigandine:[2] and [h]spare ye not her young men; destroy ye utterly all her host.

4 Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are [i]thrust through in her streets.

5 For [k]Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the LORD of hosts; [l]though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel.

6 Flee [m]out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul: be not cut off in her iniquity; [n]for this is the time of the LORD's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompence.

7 Babylon hath been [o]a golden cup in the LORD's hand, that made all the earth drunken: [p]the nations have drunken of her wine; therefore the nations [q]are mad.

8 Babylon is [r]suddenly fallen and destroyed: [s]howl for her; [t]take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed.

9 We would have healed Babylon,[3] but she is not healed: [u]forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country; for [x]her

CAUSES OF BABYLON'S OVERTHROW.—Ver. 23—30. Reasons are given for these severe dealings with Babylon. They that are employed in this war, may, if they please, know the grounds of it, and be satisfied in the justice of it, which it is fit all should be, that are called to such work. 1. Babylon has been very troublesome, vexatious, and injurious, to all its neighbours; "it has been the hammer of the whole earth," beating, beating down, and beating to pieces, all the nations far and near. It has done so long enough; it is time now that it be "cut asunder and broken." Note, He that is the God of nations will, sooner or later, assert the injured right of nations against those that unjustly and violently invade them. The God of the whole earth will break "the hammer of the whole earth." 2. Babylon has bid defiance to God himself; "Thou hast striven against the Lord, hast joined issue with him," (so the word signifies,) as in law or battle, hast openly opposed him, set up rivals with him, raised rebellion against him; therefore "thou art" now "found and caught," as in a snare. Note, Those that strive against the Lord will soon find themselves over-matched. 3. Babylon ruined Jerusalem, the holy city, and the holy house there, and must now be called to an account for that. This is the manifesto published in Zion, in the day of Babylon's visitation; it is "the vengeance of the Lord our God, the vengeance of his temple," ver. 28. The burning of the temple, and the carrying away of its vessels, were articles in charge against Babylon, on which greater stress was laid than upon its being "the hammer of the whole earth;" for Zion was "the joy" and glory "of the whole earth." Note, Whatever wrong is done to God's church, (his temple in the world,) it will certainly be reckoned for; and no vengeance will be sorer and heavier than the "vengeance of the temple." 4. Babylon had been very haughty and insolent, and therefore must have a fall, for it is the glory of God to "look upon those that are proud, and to abase them," Job xl 12. "I am against thee, O thou most proud," ver. 31. "Thou pride;" (so the word is;) and again, ver. 32, as proud as pride itself. Note, the pride of men's hearts sets God against them, and ripens them apace for ruin; for God "resists the proud," and will bring them down.

DELIVERANCE OF GOD'S PEOPLE.—Ver. 33, 34, Those that remained of the captives of the ten tribes, upon the uniting of the kingdoms of Assyria and Chalden, seemed to have come and mingled themselves with those of the two tribes, and to have mingled tears with them, so that they were "oppressed together." They were humble supplicants for their liberty, and that was all; they could not attempt any thing towards it, for "all that took them captives held them fast," and were too hard for them. But this is their comfort in distress, that, though they are weak, "their Redeemer is strong;" (ver. 34, "their Avenger," so the word signifies;) he that has a right to them, and will claim his right, and make good his claim; he is stronger than their enemies that "hold them fast;" he can overpower all the force that is against them, and put strength into his own people though they are very weak. "The Lord of hosts is his name," and he will answer to his name, and make it to appear that he is what his people call him, and will be that to them, for which they depend upon him. Note, It is the unspeakable comfort of the people of God, that though they have hosts against them, they have "the Lord of hosts" for them; and "he shall thoroughly plead their cause;" pleading he shall plead it, plead it with jealousy, plead it effectually, plead it, and carry it, "that he may give rest to the land," to his people's land, rest from all their enemies round about. This is applicable to all believers, who complain of the dominion of sin and corruption, and of their own weakness and manifold infirmities; let them know that "their Redeemer is strong," he is able to keep what they commit to him, and he will plead their cause, sin shall not have dominion over them; he will "make them free," and they shall be "free indeed;" he will give them "rest," that "rest which remains for the people of God."—Henry.

CHAP. LI. ANCIENT POMP AND POWER OF BABYLON.—Ver. 7. "Babylon hath been a golden cup," a rich and glorious empire, "a golden city," Isa. xiv. 4, "a head of gold," Dan. ii. 38, filled with all good things, as a cup with wine; nay, she had been "a golden cup in the Lord's hand," he had in a particular manner filled and favoured her with blessings, he had made the earth "drunk with this cup;" some were intoxicated with her pleasures, and debauched by her; others intoxicated with her terrors, and destroyed by her. In both senses, the New Testament Babylon is said to have made the kings of the earth drunk, Rev. xvii. 4; xviii. 3. Babylon had also been God's "battle-axe;" it was so at this time, when Jeremiah prophesied, and was likely to be yet more so, ver. 20. The forces of Babylon were God's "weapons of war," tools in his hand, with which he brake in pieces, and knocked down, "nations" and "kingdoms, horses" and "chariots," which are so much the strength of kingdoms; ver. 21, "man and woman, young and old," with which kingdoms are replenished; ver. 22, "the shepherd and his flock, the husbandman and his oxen, with which kingdoms are maintained and supplied, ver. 23. Such havoc as this the Chaldeans had made, when God employed them as instruments of his wrath for the chastising of the nations; and yet now Babylon herself must fall. Note, Those that have carried all before them a great while, will yet at length meet with their match, and their day also will come to fall, the rod will itself be thrown into the fire at last; nor can any think it will exempt them from God's judgments, that they have been instrumental in executing his judgments on others.

judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies.

10 The LORD hath [y]brought forth our righteousness: [4] come, and [z]let us declare in Zion the work of the LORD our God.

11 Make [†]bright the arrows; gather the shields: [b]the LORD hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes: [5] for [c]his device is against Babylon, to destroy it; because it is the vengeance of the LORD, [d]the vengeance of his temple.

12 Set up [e]the standard upon the walls of Babylon, make the watch strong, set up the watchmen, prepare the [‡]ambushes: for [f]the LORD hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon.

13 O thou that [g]dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, [‖]thine end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness.

14 The LORD of hosts hath [i]sworn by [§]himself, saying, Surely I will fill thee with men, as with caterpillars; and they shall [‖]lift up a shout against thee.

15 He [n]hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world [o]by his wisdom, [p]and hath stretched out the heaven by his understanding.

16 When [q]he uttereth his voice, [r]there is a [*]multitude of waters in the heavens; and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: he maketh lightnings with rain, and [s]bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

17 Every man is [†]brutish by his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image: [u]for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

18 They are vanity, the work of errors: [v]in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

19 The [*]portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is [x]the former of all things; and Israel is [b]the rod of his inheritance: the LORD of hosts is his name.

20 Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war: [6] for [‡]with thee will I break in pieces the nations; and with thee will I destroy kingdoms;

21 And with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and his rider;

22 With thee also will I break in pieces man and woman; and with thee will I break in pieces old and young; and with thee will I break in pieces the young man and the maid;

23 I will also break in pieces with thee the shepherd and his flock; and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers:

24 And I will render unto Babylon, and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea, all their evil that they have done in Zion in your sight, saith the LORD.

25 Behold, [h]I am against thee, O destroying mountain, [7] saith the LORD, [i]which destroyest all the earth; and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, [k]and will make thee a burnt mountain.

26 And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be [§]desolate for ever, saith the LORD.

27 Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of [n]Ararat, Minni, and [o]Ashchenaz; appoint a captain against her; cause the horses to come up as the rough caterpillars. [8]

28 Prepare against her the nations, with [q]the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion.

29 And the land shall tremble and sorrow: for [s]every purpose of the LORD shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant.

30 The [t]mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds: their might hath failed; they became as women: they have burned her dwelling-places; her bars are broken.

31 [x]One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, [y]to shew the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end;

32 And that [z]the passages are stopped, and the reeds they have burned with fire, [‖] and [a]the men of war are affrighted.

33 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, The daughter of Babylon is like a thrashing-floor: [§]it is time to thrash her: yet a little while, and [c]the time of her harvest shall come.

34 Nebuchadrezzar [d]the king of Babylon hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, [e]he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath [f]swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicates, he hath cast me out.

35 [‖]The violence done to me and to my [*]flesh be upon Babylon, shall the [†]inhabitant of Zion say; and, My blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say.

36 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, [h]I will plead thy cause, and [i]take vengeance for thee; and I will dry up her sea, [10] and make her springs dry.

mined to destroy Babylon, is able to make his words good, for, 1. He is the God that made the world, and therefore nothing is too hard for him to do; it is in his name that our help stands, and on him our hope is built. 2. He has the command of all the creatures that he has made; his providence is a continued creation; he has "wind and rain" at his disposal; if he speak the word, there is a "multitude of waters in the heavens;" and it is a wonder how they hang there, fed by "vapours out of the earth;" and it is a wonder how they ascend thence. "Lightnings and rain" seem contraries, as fire and water, and yet they are produced together; and the wind, which seems arbitrary in its motions, and we "know not whence it comes," is yet, we are sure, brought "out of his treasures." 3. The idols that oppose the accomplishment of his word, are a mere sham, and their worshippers brutish people. The idols are falsehood, they are vanity, they are "the work of errors;" when they come to be visited, to be examined and inquired into, they perish, their reputation sinks, and they appear to be nothing; and those "that make them are like unto them." But between the God of Israel and these gods of the heathen there is no comparison. "The portion of Jacob is not like them;" the God who speaks this, and will do it, is the "Former of all things," and "the Lord of all hosts," and therefore can do what he will: and there is a near relation between him and his people, for he is "their Portion," and they are his, they put a confidence in him as their Portion, and he is pleased to take a complacency in them, and a particular care of them, as the "lot of his inheritance;" and therefore he will do what is best for them. The repetition of these things here, which were said before, intimates both the certainty and the importance of them, and obliges us to take special notice of them; "God hath spoken once; yea, twice have we heard this, that power belongs to God;" power to destroy the most formidable enemies of his church; and if God thus "speak once, yea, twice," we are inexcusable if we do not perceive it, and attend to it.—Henry.

THE SIEGE OF BABYLON.—Ver. 31, 32. Cyrus having spent two years before Babylon, with little prospect of success, and even derided by the inhabitants; at length, having drained the river, divided his army into two parts, and marched them into the city at each end, by the channel of it; and through the brazen gates, at the ends of each street toward the river, which the riotous Babylonians had left open.—When the Persians appeared in the city, messengers would immediately be sent to inform the king, that the city was taken at one end, (not supposing that the other end was taken also:) and these would meet with one another, and increase the terror and confusion of the inhabitants; but it seems that the troops of Cyrus arrived at the palace before the messengers could inform the king of his danger. They were also to carry information, that the Persians had stopped the passages, and cut off the communication between one part of the city and another; that they had set the reeds on fire, and that the soldiers were so affrighted, as to be incapable of making any resistance. "The word translated reeds properly signifies marshes or lakes. The enemy have burnt up all the outworks, belonging to the marshy grounds about the river."—"Herodotus takes notice, that the extreme parts of the city were taken, before they who dwelt in the middle of it were sensible of the danger." [Lowth.]—Scott.

DEFENCES OF BABYLON SHATTERED.—Ver. 56—58. When the spoiler comes upon Babylon, her mighty men, who should make head against him, are immediately taken, their weapons of war fail them, "every one of their bows is broken," and stands them in no stead; their politics fail them, they call councils of war, but their princes and captains, who sit in council to concert measures for the common safety, are made drunk, they are as men intoxicated through stupidity or despair, they can form no right notions of things, they stagger, and are unsteady in their counsels and resolves, and dash one against another, and, like drunken men, fall out among themselves; at length they "sleep a perpetual sleep," and never "awake" from their wine, the wine of God's wrath, for it is to them an opiate that lays them into a fatal lethargy. The "walls of their city" fail them. When the enemy had found ways to ford Euphrates, which was thought impassable, yet surely, think they, the walls are impregnable, they are "the broad walls of Babylon," or, as the margin reads it, "the walls of broad Babylon;" the compass of the city, within the walls, was 385 furlongs, some say 480, that is, about sixty miles; the walls were 200 cubits high, and 50 cubits broad, so that two chariots might easily pass by one another upon them. Some say that there was a threefold wall about the inner city, and the like upon the outer; and that the stones of the wall, being laid in pitch instead of mortar, Gen. xi. 3, were scarcely separable; and yet these shall be "utterly broken," and "the high gates and towers shall be burnt," and the people that are employed in the defence of the city shall "labour in vain, in the fire," they shall quite tire themselves, but shall do no good.

GRATITUDE AND HUMILITY.—Ver. 50, 51. "'Ye' Israelites, 'who have escaped the sword of the Chaldeans' your oppressors, and of the Persians their destroyers, now that the year of release is come, 'go away, stand not still,' hasten to your own country again, however you may be comfortably seated in Babylon, for this is not your rest, but Canaan is." 1. He puts them in mind of the inducements they had to return: "'Remember the Lord afar off,' his presence with you now, though you are here afar off from your native soil; his presence with your fathers formerly in the temple, though you are now afar off from the ruins of it." Note, Wherever we are, in the greatest depths, at the greatest distances, we may and must remember the Lord our God; and in the time of the greatest dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and [m]an hissing, without an inhabitant.

38 They shall [n]roar together like lions: they shall [‡]yell as lions' whelps.

39 In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the LORD.

40 I will bring them down [p]like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with he-goats.

41 How is [q]Sheshach taken! and how is [r]the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become [s]an astonishment among the nations!

42 The sea is come up upon Babylon:[11] she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.

43 Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness, a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby.

44 And [y]I will punish Bel in Babylon; and [z]I will bring forth out of his mouth[12] that which he hath swallowed up: and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him; yea, [a]the wall of Babylon shall fall.

45 My people, [b]go ye out of the midst of her, and [c]deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the LORD.

46 And [§]lest your heart faint, and ye fear for the rumour that shall be heard in the land; [d]a rumour shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler.

47 Therefore, behold, the days come, that [e]I will [‖]do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon; and her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her.

48 Then the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, shall sing for Babylon: for the spoilers shall come unto her from the north, saith the LORD.

49 *As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth.

50 Ye that have [m]escaped the sword go away, stand not still: [n]remember the LORD afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind.

51 We [o]are confounded, because we have heard reproach: [p]shame hath covered our faces; [q]for strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the LORD's house.

52 Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, [r]that I will do judgment upon her graven images; and through all her land the wounded shall groan.

53 Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, and though she should fortify the height of her strength, yet from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the LORD.

54 A [x]sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans:

55 Because the LORD hath spoiled Babylon, and [y]destroyed out of her the great voice; when [z]her waves do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered:

56 Because [a]the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and [b]her mighty men are taken; [c]every one of their bows is broken: for [d]the LORD God of recompences shall surely requite.

57 And [e]I will make drunk her princes,[13] and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall [f]sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith [g]the King, whose name is the LORD of hosts.

58 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [h]The *broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly [†]broken, and her [‖]high gates shall be burned with fire; and [k]the people shall labour in vain,[14] and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

59 ¶ The word which Jeremiah the prophet commanded Seraiah the son of [‖]Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, when he went [‡]with Zedekiah the king of Judah into Babylon, in the fourth year of his reign. And this Seraiah was a [§]quiet prince.

60 So Jeremiah [m]wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even all these words that are written against Babylon.

61 And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, When thou comest to Babylon, [n]and shalt see, and shalt [o]read all these words, 62 Then shalt thou say, O LORD, thou hast spoken against this place, [p]to cut it off, that none shall remain in it, neither man nor beast, but that it shall be [‖]desolate for ever.

63 And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that [q]thou shalt bind a stone to it,[15] and cast it into the midst of Euphrates:

64 And thou shalt say, [r]Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not arise from the evil that I will bring upon her; and [s]they shall be weary. [t]Thus far are[16] the words of Jeremiah.

fears and hopes it is seasonable to "remember the Lord." "And let Jerusalem come into your mind; though it be now in ruins, yet 'favour its dust,' Ps. cii. 14, though few of you ever saw it, yet believe the report you have had concerning it, from those that 'wept when they remembered Zion;' and think of Jerusalem until you come up to a resolution to make the best of your way thither." Note, when the city of our solemnities is out of sight, yet it must not be out of mind: and it will be of great use to us, in our journey through this world, to let the heavenly Jerusalem come often into our mind. 2. He takes notice of the discouragement which the returning captives labour under; being reminded of Jerusalem, they cry out, "'We are confounded,' we cannot bear the thought of it, 'shame covers our faces' at the mention of it, for 'we have heard of the reproach of the sanctuary,' that it is profaned and ruined by strangers; how can we think of it with any pleasure?" To which he answers, ver. 52, that the God of Israel will now triumph over the gods of Babylon, and so that reproach will be for ever rolled away. Note, The believing prospect of Jerusalem's recovery will keep us from being ashamed of Jerusalem's ruins.

PROPHECY AGAINST BABYLON SENT TO THAT CITY.—Ver. 59—64. We have been long attending the judgment of Babylon, in this and the foregoing chapter; now here we have the conclusion of that whole matter. 1. A copy is taken of this prophecy, it should seem, by Jeremiah himself, for Baruch his scribe is not mentioned here. "Jeremiah wrote in a book all these words that are here written against Babylon." It is sent to Babylon, to the captives there, by the hand of Seraiah, who went there attendant on, or ambassador for, king Zedekiah, "in the fourth year of his reign." He "went with Zedekiah," or, as the margin reads it, "on the behalf of Zedekiah, into Babylon." The character given of him is observable, that this "Seraiah was a quiet prince," a prince of rest; he was in honour and power, but not, as most of the princes then were, hot and heady, making parties, and heading factions, and driving things furiously. 3. Seraiah is desired to read it to his countrymen that were already gone into captivity; "'When thou shalt come to Babylon, and shalt see" what a magnificent place it is, how large a city, how strong, how rich, and how well fortified;" "'then thou shalt read all these words' to thyself, and thy particular friends, for their encouragement in their captivity: let them with an eye of faith see to the end of these threatening powers, and comfort themselves and one another herewith." 4. He is directed to make a solemn protestation of the divine authority and unquestionable certainty of that which he had read. "Then thou shalt" look up to God, and say, "O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off." This is like the angel's protestation concerning the destruction of the New Testament Babylon; "These are the true sayings of God. These words are true and faithful," Rev. xix. 9; xxi. 5. Though Seraiah sees Babylon flourishing, having read this prophecy, he must foresee Babylon falling; and by virtue of it, must curse its habitation, though it be "taking root;" Job v. 3. "'O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place,' and I believe what thou hast spoken, that as thou knowest every thing, so thou canst do every thing. Thou hast passed sentence upon Babylon, and it shall be executed. 'Thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off,' and therefore we will neither envy its pomp, nor fear its power." When we see what this world is, how glittering its shows are, and how flattering its proposals, let us read in the book of the Lord that its "fashion passes away," and it shall shortly be "cut off," and be "desolate for ever," and we shall learn to look upon it with a holy contempt. Observe here, When we have been reading the word of God, it becomes us to direct to him whose word it is, an humbling, believing acknowledgment of the truth, equity, and goodness, of what we have read. 5. He must then tie a stone to the book, and throw it into the midst of the river Euphrates, as a confirming sign of the things contained in it, saying, "'Thus shall Babylon sink, and not rise;' for they 'shall be weary,' they shall perfectly succumb, as men tired with a burthen, under the load of 'the evil that I will bring upon them,' which they shall never shake off, or get from under." In the sign, it was the stone that sunk the book, which otherwise would have swum, but in "the thing signified," it was rather the book that sunk the stone; it was the divine sentence passed upon Babylon in this prophecy, that sunk that city, which seemed "as firm as a stone." The fall of the New Testament Babylon was represented by something like this, but much more magnificent; Rev. xviii. 21. "A mighty angel cast a great millstone into the sea, saying, Thus shall Babylon fall." Those that sink under the weight of God's wrath and curse, sink irrecoverably. The last words of the chapter seal up the vision and prophecy of this book; "Thus far are the words of Jeremiah." Not that this prophecy against Babylon was the last of his prophecies, for it was dated in the fourth year of Zedekiah, long before he finished his testimony; but this is recorded last of his prophecies, because it was to be last accomplished of all his prophecies against the Gentiles, chap. xlvi. 1. And the chapter which remains is purely historical, and, as some think, was added by some other hand.—Henry.

CHAP. LII. SACK AND RAVAGE OF JERUSALEM.—Ver. 12—23. We have here an account of the woful havoc that was made by the Chaldean army, a month after the city was taken, under the command of Nebuzar-adan, who was "captain of the guard," or general of the army, in this action. In the margin he is called "the chief of the slaughter-men," or "executioners;" for soldiers are but slaughter-men, and God employs them

3 For [c]through the anger of the LORD it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, till he had cast them out from his presence, that [f]Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, in [g]the ninth year of his reign, [h]in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came, he and all his army, against Jerusalem, and [i]pitched against it, and built forts against it round about.

5 So the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

6 And in the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, [l]the famine was sore in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land.

7 Then the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the gate between the two walls which was by the king's garden; (now the Chaldeans were by the city round about:) and they went by the way of the plain.

8 ¶ But the army of the Chaldeans pursued after the king, [o]and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho; and all his army was scattered from him.

9 Then they took the king, and carried him up unto the king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him.

10 And the king of Babylon [s]slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: [t]he slew also the princes of Judah in Riblah.

11 Then [u]he [†]put out the eyes of Zedekiah; and the king of Babylon bound him in [‡]chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in [§]prison till the day of his death.

12 ¶ Now, in the [x]fifth month, in the tenth day[1] of the month, (which was [y]the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon,) came Nebuzar-adan, [‖]captain of the guard, which [*]served the king of Babylon, into Jerusalem, 13 And [z]burned the house of the LORD,[2] and the king's house; and all the houses of Jerusalem, and all the houses of the great men, burned he with fire.

14 And all the army of the Chaldeans, that were with the captain of the guard, [b]brake down all the walls of Jerusalem round about.

15 Then Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, [c]carried away captive certain of the poor of the people, and the residue of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to the king of Babylon, and the rest of the multitude.

16 But Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, left [d]certain of the poor of the land, for vine-dressers, and for husbandmen.

17 ¶ Also the [e]pillars of brass that were in the house of the LORD, and [f]the bases, and the brasen sea that was in the house of the LORD, the Chaldeans brake, and carried all the brass of them to Babylon.

18 The [g]caldrons also, and [†]the shovels, and [h]the snuffers, [i]and the [‡]bowls, and [k]the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

19 And the basons, and the [§]fire-pans, and the bowls, and the caldrons, [l]and the candlesticks, and the spoons, and the cups; that which was of gold in gold, and that which was of silver in silver, took the captain of the guard away.

20 The [m]two pillars, one sea, and twelve brasen bulls that were under the bases, which king Solomon had made in the house of the LORD: [‖]the brass of all these vessels was [n]without weight.

21 And [o]concerning the pillars, the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits; and a [*]fillet of twelve cubits did compass it; and the thickness thereof was four fingers: it was hollow.

22 And a chapiter of brass was upon it; and the height of one chapiter was five cubits, [p]with net-work and pomegranates upon the chapiters round about, all of brass: the second pillar also, and the pomegranates were like unto these.

23 And there were ninety and six pomegranates[3] on a side; and [q]all the pomegranates upon the net-work were an hundred round about.

24 ¶ And [r]the captain of the guard took [s]Seraiah[4] the chief priest, and [t]Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the [†]door;

25 He took also out of the city [u]an eunuch, which had the charge of the men of war; and seven men of them that were [‡]near the king's person, which were found in the city; and the [§]principal scribe of the host, who mustered the people of the land; and threescore men of the people of the land, that were found in the midst of the city.

26 So Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, took them, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah.

27 And [x]the king of Babylon smote them, and put them to death [y]in Riblah, in the land of Hamath. [z]Thus Judah was carried away captive out of his own land.[5]

28 This is the people whom Nebuchadrezzar carried away captive: [a]In the seventh year three thousand Jews, and three and twenty:

as executioners of his sentence against a sinful people. Nebuzar-adan was chief of those soldiers; but in the execution he did, we have reason to fear he had no eye to God, but he served the king of Babylon and his own designs, now that he came into Jerusalem, into the very bowels of it, as captain of the slaughter-men there. And, 1. He laid the temple in ashes, having first plundered it of every thing that was valuable; he "burnt the house of the Lord," that holy and beautiful house, where their "fathers praised him," Isa. lxiv. 11. 2. He burnt the royal palace, probably that which Solomon built, after he had built the temple, which was ever since the "king's house." 3. He burnt "all the houses of Jerusalem," that is, all the houses of the great men, or those particularly; if any escaped, it was only some sorry cottages for the poor of the land. 4. He "broke down all the walls of Jerusalem," to be revenged upon them for standing in the way of his army so long. Thus, of a defenced city, it was made a ruin, Isa. xxv. 2. 5. He carried away many into captivity." But nothing is more particularly and largely related here than the carrying away of the appurtenances of the temple. All that were of great value were carried away before "the vessels of silver and gold," yet some of that sort remained, which were now carried away, ver. 19. But most of the temple-prey that was now seized was of brass; which being of less value, was carried off last. When the gold was gone, the brass soon went after, because the people repented not, according to Jeremiah's prediction, chap. xxvii. 19, &c. No walls can protect those, nor pillars sustain those, from whom God withdraws. These pillars of the temple were not for support, (for there was nothing built upon them,) but for ornament and significancy. They were called "Jachin, He will establish;" and "Boaz, In him is strength;" so that the breaking of these signified that God would no longer establish his house, nor be the Strength of it. These pillars are here very particularly described, ver. 21—23, from 1 Kings vii. 15, that the extraordinary beauty and stateliness of them may affect us the more with the demolishing of them. All the vessels that belonged to the brazen altar were carried away; for the iniquity of Jerusalem, like that of Eli's house, was not to be purged by sacrifice or offering, 1 Sam. iii. 14. It is said, ver. 20, "The brass of all these vessels was without weight:" so it was in the making of them, 1 Kings vii. 47. "The weight of the brass was not" then "found out," 2 Chron. iv. 18, and so it was in the destroying of them. Those that made great spoil of them did not stand to weigh them, as purchasers do, for whatever they weighed it was all their own.

SLAUGHTER AND CAPTIVITY.—24—30. We have here a very melancholy account, 1. Of the slaughter of some great men, in cold blood, at Riblah, seventy-two in number, (according to the number of the elders of Israel, Num. xi. 26, 27,) so they are computed, 2 Kings xxv. 18, 19. We read there of five out of the temple, two out of the city, five out of the court, and sixty out of the country. The account here agrees with that, except in one article; there, it is said that there were five; here, there were seven, of those that were "near the king;" which Dr. Lightfoot reconciles thus, that he took away seven of those that were near the king; but two of them were Jeremiah himself, and Ebed-melech, who were both discharged, as we have read before, so that there were only five of them put to death, and so the number was reduced to seventy-two; some of all ranks, for they had all corrupted their way; and it is probable that such were made examples of, as had been most forward to excite and promote the rebellion against the king of Babylon. 2. Of the captivity of the rest. (1.) Of two captivities which we had an account of before, one in the seventh year of Nebuchadnezzar, the same with that which is said to be in his eighth year, 2 Kings xxiv. 12, another in his eighteenth year, the same with that which is said, ver. 12, to be in his nineteenth year. But the sums here are very small, in comparison with what we find expressed concerning the former, 2 Kings xxiv. 14, 16, when there were 18,000 carried captive; whereas here they are said to be 3,023; small, too, in comparison with what we may reasonably suppose concerning the latter; for when all the residue of the people were carried away, ver. 15, one would think there should be more than 832 souls; therefore Dr. Lightfoot conjectures that these accounts being joined to the story of the putting to death of the great men at Riblah, all that are here said to be carried away were "put to death" as rebels. (2.) Of a third captivity, not mentioned before, which was in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar, four years after the destruction of Jerusalem, ver. 30; then Nebuzar-adan came, and "carried away" 745 Jews; it is probable that this was done in revenge of the murder of Gedaliah, which was another rebellion against the king of Babylon, and that those who were now taken, were aiders and abettors of Ishmael in that murder, and were not only carried away, but put to death for it; yet this is uncertain. If this be the sum total of the captives, ("all the persons were 4,600,") ver. 30, we may see how strangely they were reduced from what they had been, and may wonder as much how they came to be as numerous again, as afterward we find them; for it should seem that, as at first in Egypt, so again in Babylon, the Lord made them fruitful in the land of their affliction, and the more they were oppressed, the more they multiplied. And the truth is, this people were often miracles, both of judgment and mercy.

FINAL LESSON.—And now, upon the whole matter, comparing the prophecy and the history of this book together, we may learn, in general, 1. That it is no new thing for churches and persons highly dignified to degenerate, and become very corrupt. 2. That iniquity tends to the ruin of those that harbour it; and if it be not repented of and forsaken, will certainly end in their ruin. 3. That external professions and privileges

THE LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

"The Jews denominate this book Echah (How), from the first word of the text; or sometimes they call it Kinnoth (Tears), alluding to the mournful character of the work. Josephus and other writers suppose that it was written upon the occasion of Josiah's death. The generality of commentators are, however, of a contrary opinion; and indeed Jeremiah here bewails the desolations of Jerusalem, the captivity of Judah, the miseries of famine, and the cessation of all public worship, in terms so forcible and pathetic, that they appear rather applicable to some period after the destruction of Jerusalem, when, agreeably to his own predictions, every circumstance of complicated distress overshadowed Judea."—Grey's Key. Each of the chapters consists of twenty-two stanzas (for no doubt the work is poetical). Each verse in the first two begins with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet, in regular order, after the manner of some of the Psalms. The third has three short verses to each stanza—each beginning with the Hebrew letters as before; but with one variation as to the order of them. The fourth accords to the first and second; but the fifth, though consisting of the same number of verses, is not arranged according to the initial letters. There are many traditions extant about the death of this prophet; but no great dependence can be placed on them.

HOW doth the city [b]sit solitary[1] that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, [c]how is she become tributary!

2 She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks; among all her lovers she hath [d]none to comfort her: [e]all her friends have dealt treacherously with her; they are become her enemies.

3 Judah is [f]gone into captivity because of affliction, and [g]because of great servitude; [h]she dwelleth among the heathen, she findeth no rest: all her persecutors overtook her between the straits.

4 The [i]ways of Zion do mourn,[2] because none come to the solemn feasts: all her gates are desolate; her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness.

5 Her adversaries are the chief, her enemies prosper; for [k]the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: [l]her children are gone into captivity before the enemy.

6 And [m]from the daughter of Zion [n]all her beauty is departed: her princes are become like [o]harts that find no pasture; and they are gone without strength before the pursuer.

7 Jerusalem [p]remembered in the days of her affliction, and of her miseries, all her [q]pleasant things that she had in the days of old, when her people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths.

8 Jerusalem [r]hath grievously sinned; therefore she is [s]removed: [t]all that honoured her despise her, because they have seen her nakedness; yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward.

9 Her filthiness is in her skirts; [u]she remembereth not her last end;[3] therefore she came down wonderfully: [v]she had no comforter. O Lord, [w]behold my affliction; [x]for the enemy hath magnified himself.

10 The adversary hath [y]spread out his hand upon all her [z]pleasant things: for she hath [a]seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary, [b]whom thou didst command that they should not enter into thy congregation.

11 All her people sigh, they seek bread; will not only not amount to an excuse for sin, and an exemption from ruin, but will be a very great aggravation of both. 4. That no word of God shall fall to the ground, but the event will fully answer the prediction; and the unbelief of man shall not make God's threatenings, any more than his promises, of no effect. The justice and truth of God are here written in bloody characters, for the conviction or the confusion of all those that make a jest of his threatenings. Let them "not be deceived, God is not mocked."—Henry.

Chap. I. Nature and Style of the Book.—Ver. 1, 2. "The fifty-second chapter of Jeremiah was formerly placed as a prologue to this book; but instead of it, the Greek and Latin copies have a short introduction, which may be thus translated, 'It came to pass, that after Israel was carried captive, and Jerusalem desolate, the prophet Jeremiah sat weeping, and bewailed Jerusalem with this lamentation, and said,' &c. &c.—This argument was occasioned, as Huetius probably conjectures, by removing the fifty-second chapter from the place where it first stood, and placing it at the conclusion of the prophecy of Jeremiah." [Lowth.]—In these pathetic complaints, the prophet sometimes speaks in his own person; at other times Jerusalem, or Zion, as a sorrowing female, is the speaker; and at others a chorus, or collective body of the Jews, is introduced. The reader also in some places is made to witness the miseries of the people during the siege of Jerusalem; then he reviews the dreary condition of the city and land, when the desolations were completed, and hears the insults of their enemies over them; or his attention is called to the poor captives at Babylon, as if indeed a spectator of the hardships put on them. Thus the scenes are shifted, so to speak, in such a manner as may best realize to the mind the various and complicated miseries endured by the nation, from the death of Josiah to the completion of the captivity, but especially at the close of that period.—Scott.

The Candlestick Removed.—Ver. 4. "The ways of Zion do mourn," they look melancholy, overgrown with grass and weeds. It used to be a pleasant diversion to see people continually passing and repassing in the highway that led to the temple, but now you may stand there long enough, and see nobody stir, for "none come to the solemn feasts." A full end is put to them by the destruction of that which was the "city of our solemnities." Isa. xxxiii. 20. "The solemn feasts" had been neglected and profaned, [illegible] justly is an end now put to them. But when thus "the ways of Zion mourn," all the seat of Zion cannot but mourn with them. It is a [illegible] when our religious assemblies broke up and scattered, and those restrained from them, that would gladly attend them. And as "the ways of Zion mourned," so "the gates of Zion," in which the faithful worshippers used to meet, "are desolate," for there is none to meet in them. Time was when "the Lord loved the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob," but now he has forsaken them, and is provoked to withdraw from them, and therefore it cannot but fare with them as it did with the temple when Christ quitted it, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate, Matt. xxiii. 38.

Craving after Sympathy.—Ver. 12. "'Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Can you look upon me without concern? What! are your hearts as adamants, and your eyes are marbles, that you cannot bestow upon me one compassionate thought, or look, or tear? Are not you also in the body? Is it nothing to you that your neighbour's house is on fire?" There are those to whom Zion's sorrows and ruins are nothing; they are not "grieved for the affliction of Joseph." How pathetically does she beg their compassion! ver. 18. "'Hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow:' hear my complaints, and see what cause I have for them." This is a request like that of Job, chap. xix. 21. "Have pity, have pity upon me, O ye my friends!" It helps to make a burthen sit lighter, if our friends sympathise with us, and mingle their tears with ours, for this is an evidence that, though we are in affliction, we are not in contempt, which is commonly as much dreaded in an affliction as any thing.

Confession.—Ver. 18. She justifies God in all that is brought upon her, acknowledging that her sins had deserved these severe chastenings. The yoke that lies so heavy, and binds so hard, is "the yoke of her transgressions," ver. 14. The fetters we are held in are of our own making, and it is with our own rod that we are beaten. When the church had spoken here, as if she thought the Lord severe, she does well to correct herself, at least to explain herself, by acknowledging, ver. 18, "The Lord is righteous." He does us no wrong in dealing thus with us, nor can we charge him with any injustice in it; how unrighteous soever men are, we are sure that the "Lord is righteous," and manifests his justice, though they contradict all the laws of theirs. Note, Whatever our troubles are which God is pleased to inflict upon us, we must own that therein he is "righteous;" we understand neither him nor ourselves if we do not own it, 2 Chron. xii. 6. She owns the equity of God's actions, by owning the iniquity of her own; "I have rebelled against his commandments," ver. 18, and again, ver. 20, "I have grievously rebelled." We cannot speak ill enough of sin, and we must always speak [illegible] own sin, must call it "rebellion, grievous rebellion," [illegible] punishments. It is [illegible] "My friends are [illegible]

18 ¶ The [m]LORD is righteous; [n]for I have rebelled against his [§]commandment: hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow; my virgins and my young men[6] are gone into captivity.

19 I called for my lovers, but they deceived me; [r]my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat to relieve their souls.

20 Behold, O LORD, for I am in distress; my bowels are troubled; mine heart is turned within me; [u]for I have grievously rebelled: [x]abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death.

21 They [y]have heard that I sigh; there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that thou hast done it: thou wilt bring [b]the day that thou hast [l]called, and [c]they shall be like unto me.

22 Let [d]all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions: for my sighs are many, and [e]my heart is faint.

CHAP. II.

Jeremiah lamenteth Jerusalem's misery, 1. He complaineth thereof to God, 20.

HOW hath the LORD [b]covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, [c]and cast down from heaven unto the earth [d]the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger!

2 The LORD hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied: [g]he hath thrown down in his wrath the strong holds of the daughter of Judah; he hath *brought them down to the ground: he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof.

3 He hath cut off in his fierce anger all [l]the horn of Israel: [k]he hath drawn back his right hand[l] from before the enemy, and [l]he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about.

4 He hath [m]bent his bow like an enemy: he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew all [†]that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion: [n]he poured out his fury like fire.

5 The LORD [c]was as an enemy: [p]he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces; he hath destroyed his strong holds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation.

6 And he hath violently taken away his [‡]tabernacle, as if it were of a garden; he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the LORD hath [t]caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised, in the indignation of his anger, the king and the priest.

7 The LORD hath [x]cast off his altar; he hath abhorred his sanctuary; he hath [§]given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise[2] in the house of the LORD, as in the day of a solemn feast.

8 The LORD hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion: he hath stretched out a line,[3] [c]he hath not withdrawn his hand from [l]destroying: therefore [d]he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together.

9 Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars: her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: [g]the law is no more; [h]her prophets also find no vision from the LORD.

10 The [l]elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, [k]and keep silence: they have [l]cast up dust upon their heads; [m]they have girded themselves with sackcloth; [n]the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.

within me,' is restless, is turned upside down; 'for I have grievously rebelled.'" Note, Sorrow for sin must be great sorrow, and must affect the soul.

APPEAL TO GOD.—She appeals both to the mercy and to the justice of God, in her present case. She appeals to the mercy of God concerning her own sorrows, which had made her the proper object of his compassion, ver. 20. "'Behold, O Lord, for I am in distress;' take cognizance of my case, and take such order for relief as thou pleasest." Note, It is matter of comfort to us, that the troubles which oppress our spirits are open before God's eye.—Henry.

CHAP. II. ALTERED CONDITION OF ZION.—Ver. 1—9. Time was, when the ordinances of God were administered among them in their power and purity, and they had those tokens of God's presence with them; but now those were taken from them, that part of the "beauty of Israel" was gone, which was indeed their greatest beauty. 1. The ark was God's footstool, under the mercy-seat, between the cherubims; this was of all others the most sacred symbol of God's presence; (it is called his footstool, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2; Ps. xcix. 5, cxxxii. 7,) there the Shechinah rested, and with an eye to this, Israel was often protected and saved; but now he "remembered not his footstool," the ark itself was suffered, as it should seem, to fall into the hands of the Chaldeans. God, being angry, threw that away, for it shall be no longer his footstool, the earth shall be so, as it had been before the ark was, Isa. lxvi. 1. Of what little value are the tokens of his presence, when his presence is gone! 2. They that ministered in holy things had been "pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion," ver. 4, they had been "purer than snow, whiter than milk," chap. iv. 7, none more pleasant in the eyes of all good people than those that did the service of the tabernacle; but now these are slain and their "blood mingled with their sacrifices;" thus is the priest despised as well as the king. Note, When those that were pleasant to the eye in Zion's tabernacle are slain, God must be acknowledged in it, he has done it, and "the burning which the Lord has kindled must be bewailed" by the whole house of Israel, as in the case of Nadab and Abihu, Lev. x. 6. 3. The temple was God's tabernacle, (as the tabernacle, while that was in being, is called "his temple," Ps. xxvii. 4,) and this "he has violently taken away," ver. 6, he has plucked up the stakes of it, and cut the cords, it shall be no more a tabernacle, much less his. When men profane God's tabernacle, it is just with him to take it from them. God had justly refused to "smell in their solemn assemblies," Amos v. 21; they had provoked them to withdraw from, and then no marvel that he has "destroyed his places of the assembly;" what should they do with the places when the services were become an abomination? He has now "abhorred his sanctuary," ver. 7, it has been defiled with sin, that only thing which he hates, and for the sake of that he abhors even his sanctuary, which he had delighted in, and called "his rest for ever," Ps. cxxxii. 14. Thus he had "done to Shiloh." 4. The solemn feasts and the Sabbaths had been carefully remembered, and the people constantly put in mind of them; but now the Lord has "caused those to be forgotten," not only in the country, among those that lived at a distance, but even in Zion itself; for there were none left to remember them, nor were there the places left where they used to be observed. Now that Zion was in ruins, no difference was made between Sabbath-times and other times: every day was a day of mourning, so that all the "solemn feasts were forgotten." Note, It is just with God to deprive those of the benefit and comfort of Sabbaths and solemn feasts, who have not duly valued them, nor conscientiously observed them, but have profaned them, which was one of the sins that the Jews were often charged with.

COMFORT IN STORE.—Ver. 13, 19, 20. Comforts for the cure of these lamentations are here sought for, and prescribed. 1. They are sought for, and inquired after. The prophet seeks to find out some suitable, acceptable words to say to her in this case; "Wherewith shall I comfort thee, O virgin, daughter of Zion?" Note, We should endeavour to comfort those whose calamities we lament, and when our passions have made the worst of them, our wisdom should correct them, and labour to make the best of them; we should study to make our sympathies with our afflicted friends turn to their consolation. Now the two most common topics of comfort in case of affliction, are here tried, but are laid by, because they would not hold. We commonly endeavour to comfort our friends by telling them, (1.) That their case is not singular, nor without precedent; there are many whose trouble is greater, and lies heavier upon them than theirs does; but Jerusalem's case will not admit this argument; "'What thing shall I liken to thee,' or 'what shall I equal to thee that I may comfort thee?' What city, what country, is there, whose case is parallel to thine? What witness shall I produce to prove an example that will reach thy present calamitous state? Alas, there is none, no sorrow like thine: because there is none whose honour was like thine." (2.) We tell them that their case is not desperate, but that it may easily be remedied; but neither will that be admitted here, upon a view of human probabilities; for "thy breach is great, like the sea," like the breach which the sea sometimes makes upon the land, which cannot be repaired, but still grows wider and wider. Thou art wounded, and "who shall heal thee?" No wisdom or power of man can repair the desolations of such a broken, shattered state. It is to no purpose therefore to administer any of these common cordials; therefore, 2. The method of cure prescribed, is, to address themselves to bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, [r]for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucklings [*]swoon in the streets of the city.

12 They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers' bosom.

13 What thing shall I take to witness for thee? [t] what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? [y]for thy breach is great like the sea; [z]who can heal thee?

14 Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee; and [b]they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee [c]false burdens, and causes of banishment.

15 All that pass [†]by [d]clap their hands at thee; [f]they hiss and [g]wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, [h]Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth?

16 All [i]thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for: we have found, we have seen it.

17 The LORD hath [n]done that which he had devised: he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: [o]he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and [p]he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee; he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.

18 Their heart cried unto the LORD, [r]O wall of the daughter of Zion,[5] [s]let tears run down like a river day and night: give thyself no rest; let not the apple of thine eye cease.

19 Arise, cry out in the night; in the beginning of the watches [x]pour out thine heart like water before the face of the LORD: lift up thy hands toward him for the life of thy young children, that faint for hunger in the top of every street.

20 ¶ Behold, O LORD, and [a]consider to whom thou hast done this. Shall the women eat their fruit, and children [‡]of a span long? [c]shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the LORD?

21 The young and the old lie on the ground in the streets: my virgins and my young men are fallen by the sword; thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger; thou hast killed, and not pitied.

22 Thou hast called, as in a solemn day, my terrors round about, so that in the day of the LORD's anger none escaped nor remained: those that I have swaddled and brought up, hath mine enemy consumed.

I AM the man that hath seen affliction by the rod of his wrath.

2 He hath led me, and [b]brought me into darkness,[1] but not into light.

3 Surely [c]against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day.

4 My [d]flesh and my skin hath he made old; [e]he hath broken my bones.

5 He hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travail.[2]

6 He hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old.

7 He hath [l]hedged me about, that I cannot get out; he hath made my chain heavy.

8 Also when I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer.

9 He hath inclosed my ways with hewn stone; he hath [m]made my paths crooked.

10 He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, and as a lion in secret places.

11 He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces: [q]he hath made me desolate.

12 He hath [r]bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow.

13 He hath caused the [*]arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins.

14 I was [s]a derision to all my people, and their song all the day.

15 He hath filled me with [†]bitterness, he hath made me drunken with wormwood.

18 And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the LORD:

19 [‖]Remembering mine affliction and my misery, [v]the wormwood and the gall.

20 My soul [a]hath them still in remembrance, and is [*]humbled in me.

21 This I [†]recall to my mind, therefore have I hope.

22 ¶ It is [f]of the LORD's mercies that we are not consumed, [g]because his compassions fail not.

23 They are [h]new every morning: [i]great is thy faithfulness.

24 The LORD is [k]my portion, saith my soul; [l]therefore will I hope in him.

25 The LORD is [m]good unto them that wait for him, [n]to the soul that seeketh him.

26 It is good that a man should both hope and [q]quietly wait for the salvation of the LORD.

27 It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth.

God, and by a penitent prayer to commit their case to him, and to be instant and constant in such prayers; "'Arise' out of thy dust, out of thy despondency, 'cry out in the night,' watch unto prayer; when others are asleep, be thou upon thy knees, importunate with God for mercy; 'in the beginning of the watches,' of each of the four watches of the night, (let thine 'eyes prevent' them, Ps. cxix. 148,) then 'pour out thine heart like water before the Lord,' be free and full in prayer, be sincere and serious in prayer, open thy mind, spread thy case before the Lord; 'lift up thine hands toward him' in holy desire and expectation; beg for 'the life of thy young children;' these poor lambs, what have they done? 2 Sam. xxiv. 17. Take with you words, take with you these words, 'Behold, O Lord, and consider to whom thou hast done this,' with whom thou hast dealt thus! Are they not thine own, the seed of Abraham thy friend, and of Jacob thy chosen? Lord, Take their case into thy compassionate consideration!" —Henry.

CHAP. III. CONSTRUCTION OF THIS CHAPTER.—Ver. 1. The construction of this chapter differs from that of those which have been considered. It consists of the same number of stanzas, according to the number of the letters in the Hebrew alphabet; but every stanza is divided into three parts, or verses, each of which begins with the same Hebrew letter; the first three verses with Aleph, the three next with Beth, &c.; and in one instance the order of the letters varies from that which is elsewhere observed. It also forms a distinct elegy, or lamentation, arranged differently from those which precede. The prophet speaks throughout the whole, lamenting his afflictions, seeking out consolatory topics, and giving counsel and encouragement to his fellow-mourners. Some, indeed, understand it to be the language of a chorus of Jews, speaking as one person; but so many passages evidently refer to Jeremiah's own personal trials, that this interpretation seems inadmissible. "The subject of the chapter is penitential meditations upon the prophet's own calamities, as well as those of the public; together with pious reflections upon the end which God proposes in sending afflictions, and the good use which men ought to make of such chastisements." [Lowth.]—"I am the man that has seen this great affliction, which the Lord hath in just anger brought upon his people." [Bp. Hall.]—Probably he spake in his own person, as one who, besides his peculiar afflictions, shared largely in those of his nation, and sympathized with them in those from which he was most exempted. He spake of himself as a public character, for the common benefit, being one of many who thus shared and mourned over the calamities of Israel.—Scott.

GOD'S MERCIES.—Ver. 22. Bad as things are, it is owing to the mercy of God that they are not worse. We are "afflicted by the rod of his wrath," but "it is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed." When we are in distress, we should, for the encouragement of our faith and hope, observe what makes for us as well as what makes against us. Things are bad, but they might have been worse, and therefore there is hope that they may be better. Observe here, 1. The streams of mercy acknowledged; "We are not consumed." Note, The church of God is like Moses's bush burning, yet "not consumed;" whatever hardships it has met with, or may meet with, it shall have a being in the world to the end of time. It is "persecuted" of men, "but not forsaken" of God, and therefore, though it is "cast down," it is "not destroyed," 2 Cor. iv. 9; corrected, yet "not consumed;" refined in the furnace as silver, but "not consumed" as dross. 2. These streams followed up to the fountain; "It is of the Lord's mercies." Here are mercies in the plural number, denoting the abundance and variety of those mercies. God is an inexhaustible "Fountain of mercy, the Father of mercies." Note, We all owe it to the sparing mercy of God, "that we are not consumed;" others have been consumed round about us, and we ourselves have been in the consuming, and yet "we are not consumed;" we are out of the grave, we are out of hell.

THE YOKE IN YOUTH.—Ver. 27. "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth." Many of the young men were carried into captivity; to make them easy in it, he tells them that it was good for them to "bear the yoke" of that captivity, and they would find it so, if they would but accommodate themselves to their condition, and labour to answer God's ends in laying that heavy yoke upon them. It is very applicable to the yoke of "God's commands; it is good for" young people to take that yoke upon them "in their youth;" we cannot begin too soon to be religious; it will make our duty the more acceptable to God, and easy to ourselves, if we engage in it when we are young. But here it seems to be meant of the yoke of "affliction;" many have found it good to bear this in youth, it has made them humble and serious, and has weaned them from the world, who otherwise would have been proud and unruly, and "as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke."

UNREASONABLENESS OF COMPLAINT.—Ver. 30. "What! shall a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?" The reasons here urged are very cogent. 1. We are "men;" let us herein show ourselves men. Shall "a man complain?" And again, "a man!" We are men, and not brutes, reasonable creatures, who should act with reason, who should look forward, and both ways may fetch considerations enough to silence our complaints. We are men, and not children that cry for every thing that hurts them; we are men, and not gods; subjects, not lords: we are not our own masters, not our own carvers; we are bound, and must obey, must submit; we are men, and not angels, and 28 He sitteth alone, and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him.

29 He [t]putteth his mouth in the dust, if so be there may be hope.

30 He giveth [x]his cheek to him that smiteth him: he is [y]filled full with reproach.

31 For the LORD will not cast off for ever:

32 But though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies.

33 For he doth not [b]afflict [‡]willingly, nor grieve the children of men.

34 To [c]crush under his feet[4] all the prisoners of the earth,

35 To turn aside the right of a man before the face of [§]the most High, 36 To subvert a man in his cause, [f]the LORD [l]approveth not.

37 ¶ Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the LORD commandeth it not?

38 [h]Out of the mouth of the most High proceedeth not evil and good?[5]

39 Wherefore doth [i]a living man *complain, [k]a man for the punishment of his sins?

40 Let us [l]search and try our ways, and [m]turn again to the LORD.

41 Let us [n]lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.

42 We have [p]transgressed, and have rebelled: [q]thou hast not pardoned.

43 Thou hast [r]covered with anger, and persecuted us: [t]thou hast slain, thou hast not pitied.

44 Thou hast [u]covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through.

45 Thou hast made us as the off-scouring and refuse in the midst of the people.

46 All our enemies have opened their mouths against us.

47 Fear and a snare is come upon us, desolation and destruction.

48 Mine [c]eye runneth down with rivers of water for the destruction of the daughter of my people.

49 Mine eye trickleth down, and ceaseth not, without any intermission, 50 Till the LORD look down, and behold from heaven.

51 Mine eye affecteth mine [†]heart, [‡]because of all the daughters of my city.

52 Mine enemies chased me sore, like a bird, without cause.

53 They have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone upon me.

54 Waters flowed over mine head; then I said, I am cut off.

55 ¶ I [o]called upon thy name, O LORD, out of the low dungeon.

56 Thou [p]hast heard my voice: [q]hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry.

57 Thou [r]drewest near in the day that I called upon thee: [s]thou saidst, Fear not.

58 O LORD, [t]thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul; [u]thou hast redeemed my life.

59 O LORD, thou hast seen my wrong; [y]judge thou my cause.

60 Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me.

61 Thou hast heard their reproach, O LORD, and all their imaginations against me;

62 The lips of those that rose up against me, [c]and their device against me all the day.

63 Behold [d]their sitting down, and their rising up; I am their musick.

64 [f]Render unto them a recompence, O LORD, according to the work of their hands.

65 Give them [§]sorrow of heart, [g]thy curse unto them.

66 [h]Persecute and destroy[6] them in anger from under the heavens of the LORD.

therefore cannot expect to be free from troubles as they are; we are not inhabitants of that world where there is no sorrow, but this, where there is nothing but sorrow; we are men, and not devils, are not in that deplorable, helpless, hopeless state that they are in, but have something to comfort ourselves with which they have not. 2. We are "living" men; through the good hand of our God upon us, we are alive yet, though dying daily; and shall "a living man complain?" No, he has more reason to be thankful for life than to complain of any of the burthens and calamities of life. Our lives are frail and forfeited, and yet we are alive; now "the living, the living, they" should "praise" and not complain, Isa. xxxviii. 19; while there is life there is hope, and therefore, instead of complaining that things are bad, we should encourage ourselves with the hope that they will be better. 3. We are "sinful" men, and that which we complain of is the just "punishment of our sins;" nay, it is far less than our iniquities have deserved; we have little reason to complain of our trouble, for it is our own doing, we may thank ourselves, our own wickedness corrects us, Prov. xix. 3; we have no reason to quarrel with God, for he is righteous in it, he is the Governor of the world, and it is necessary that he should maintain the honour of his government by chastising the disobedient. Are we suffering for our sins? Then let us not complain, for we have other work to do; instead of repining, we must be repenting; and as an evidence that God is reconciled to us, we must be endeavouring to reconcile ourselves to his holy will. Are we "punished for our sins?" It is our wisdom then to submit, and to kiss the rod; for if we still walk contrary to God, he will punish us yet seven times more, for "when he judges he will overcome;" but if we accommodate ourselves to him, though we be "chastened of the Lord," we shall not be "condemned with the world." We must set ourselves to answer God's intention in afflicting us, which is, to bring sin to our remembrance, and to bring us home to himself, ver. 40. These are the two things which our afflictions should put us upon. (1.) A serious consideration of ourselves, and a reflection upon our lives past; "Let us search and try our ways," search what they have been, and then try whether they have been right and good, or no; search as for a malefactor in disguise, that flies and hides himself, and then try whether guilty or not guilty. Let conscience be employed both to search and to try, and let it have leave to deal faithfully, to accomplish a diligent search, and to make an impartial trial. "Let us try our ways," that by them we may try ourselves, for we are to judge of our state not by our faint wishes, but by our steps; not by one particular step, but by our ways; the ends we aim at, the rules we go by, and the agreeableness of the temper of our minds and the tenor of our lives to those ends and those rules. When we are in affliction, it is seasonable to "consider our ways," Hag. i. 5, that what is amiss may be repented of, and amended for the future, and so we may answer the intention of the affliction. We are apt, in times of public calamity, to reflect upon other people's ways, and lay blame upon them, whereas our business is to "search and try our own ways;" we have work enough to do at home; we must each of us say, "What have I done? What have I contributed to the public flames?" That we may each of us mend one, and then we should all be mended. (2.) A sincere conversion to God; "Let us 'turn again to the Lord,' to him who is turned against us, and whom we have turned from; to him let us turn by repentance and reformation, as to our Owner and Ruler: we have been with him, and it has never been well with us since we forsook him, let us therefore now turn again to him." This must accompany the former, and be the fruit of it; "therefore," we must "search and try our ways," that we may turn from the evil of them to God; this was the method David took, Ps. cxix. 59, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies."—Henry.

CHAP. IV. TERRIBLE SUFFERING.—Ver. 3—4. Little children were starved for want of bread and water. The nursing-mothers, having no meat for themselves, had no milk for the babes at their breast, so that though in disposition they were really compassionate, yet in fact they seemed to be cruel, "like the ostriches in the wilderness, that leave their eggs in the dust;" Job xxxix. 14, 15, having no food for their children, they were forced to neglect them, and do what they could to forget them, because it was a pain to them to think of them when they had nothing for them; in this they were worse than the seals, or sea-monsters, or "whales," (as some render it,) for they "drew out the breast, and gave suck to" their young, which "the daughter of my people" will not do. Children cannot shift for themselves as grown people can; and therefore it was the more painful to see "the tongue of the sucking child cleave to the roof of his mouth for thirst," because there was not a drop of water to moisten it; and to hear the young children, that could but just speak, "ask bread" of their parents, who had none to give them, no, nor any friend that could supply them. As doleful as our thoughts are of this case, so thankful should our thoughts be of the great plenty we enjoy, and the food convenient we have for ourselves and for our children, and for "those of our own house."—Henry.

SIN THE SOURCE OF PUNISHMENT.—Ver. 13—16. The sins of the false prophets and ungodly priests conduced to the total degeneracy of the nation! and their murder of the prophets and righteous servants of God, and even of children offered to idols, provoked him to give them up to destruction. Thus the prophets and priests caused such numbers to be slain, that when they walked in the streets, they could not avoid being polluted with blood; as blind men, when wandering about, could not shun those things, the touch of which rendered them unclean. Nay, they were even covered with the sodden their own children: they were their meat [x]in the destruction of the daughter of my people.

11 The [y]LORD hath accomplished his fury: he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath [z]kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof.

12 The [a]kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed [b] that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem.

13 For [b]the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, [c]that have shed the blood of the just in the midst of her,

14 They [d]have wandered as blind men in the streets, [e]they have polluted [‡]themselves with blood, [f]so that men could not touch their garments.

15 They cried unto them, [g]Depart ye; it is [*]unclean; depart, depart, touch not: when they fled away and wandered, they said among the heathen, They shall no more sojourn there.

16 The [†]anger of the LORD hath divided them: [h]he will no more regard them: they respected not[5] the persons of the priests, they favoured not the elders.

17 As for us, [k]our eyes as yet failed for our vain help: in our watching we have watched for a nation that could not save us.

18 They hunt our steps, that we cannot go in our streets: [m]our end is near, our days are fulfilled; for our end is come.

19 Our [n]persecutors are swifter than the eagles of the heaven: [o]they pursued us upon the mountains, they laid wait for us in the wilderness.

20 The [p]breath of our nostrils, [q]the anointed of the LORD, [r]was taken in their pits, of whom we said, Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen.

21 ¶ Rejoice and [s]be glad,[6] O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in [t]the land of Uz; [u]the cup also shall pass through unto thee; thou shalt be drunken, [x]and shalt make thyself naked.

22 [‡]The [y]punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion; [z]he will no more carry thee away into captivity: [a]he will visit thine iniquity, O daughter of Edom; he will [§]discover thy sins.

CHAP. V.

A pitiful complaint of Zion, in prayer to God.

[a]REMEMBER, O LORD, what is come upon us: consider, and behold our reproach.

2 Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens.

3 We are orphans and fatherless, our mothers are as widows.

4 We have drunken our water for money; our wood[1] is [*]sold unto us.

5 [†]Our necks are under persecution: we labour, and have no rest.

6 We have [z]given the hand to the Egyptians, and to the Assyrians, to be satisfied with bread.

7 Our [i]fathers have sinned, [k]and are not; and we have borne their iniquities.

8 Servants have ruled over us: [m]there is none that doth deliver us out of their hand.

9 We gat our bread with the peril of our lives,[2] because of the sword of the wilderness.

10 Our skin was black like an oven, because of the [‡]terrible famine.

11 They [p]ravished the women in Zion, and the maids in the cities of Judah.

12 Princes are hanged up by their hand: the faces of elders were not honoured.

13 They took the young men to grind, and the children fell under the wood.

14 The elders have ceased from the gate, the young men from their musick.

15 The joy of our heart is ceased; [x]our dance is turned into mourning.

16 The crown [§]is fallen from our head: [s]woe unto us, that we have sinned!

17 For this our heart is faint; for these things our eyes are dim.

18 Because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it.

19 Thou, O LORD, [e]remainest for ever; [f]thy throne from generation to generation.

20 Wherefore [g]dost thou forget us for ever, and forsake us [1]so long time?

21 [h]Turn thou us unto thee, O LORD, and we shall be turned; renew our days as of old.

22 [*]But [k]thou hast utterly[3] rejected us; thou art very wroth against us.

blood of the slain, so that men could not touch their garments without being defiled. The Jews had been wont to say to a Gentile "Stand by thyself, I am holier than thou," and to bid him depart, and keep at a distance as unclean; but now the very heathen drove them out of the city as unclean, and burned it as polluted; "And they used the same words to express their abhorrence of this defilement of such persons, whose office it was to cleanse and purify others, as the lepers were by the law obliged to pronounce on themselves." [Lowth.] They considered them as monsters of wickedness, and in contempt of their former preciseness, or as loathing their vile conduct, they disdainfully shunned their company; nay, when they fled, or wandered from place to place, even the idolaters would not admit them to sojourn with them! Thus the Lord divided them into distant places; he no more regarded them as his people; and therefore their enemies no more respected their priests and elders, but considered them as the chief criminals, and the peculiar objects of their execration.—Scott.

ENEMIES OF SION PROSTRATED.—Ver. 21. "'Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom,' go on to insult over Zion in distress, till thou hast filled up the measure of thy iniquity; do so, rejoice in thy own present exemption from the common fate of thy neighbours." This is like Solomon's upbraiding the young man with his ungoverned mirth, Eccles. xi. 9; "'Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth;' rejoice, if thou canst, when God comes to reckon with thee, and that he will do ere long; 'the cup' of trembling, which it is now Jerusalem's turn to drink deep of, 'shall pass through unto thee,' it shall go round till it comes to be thy lot to pledge it." Note, This is a good reason why we should not insult over any who are in misery, because we ourselves also are in the body, and we know not how soon their case may be ours. But those who please themselves in the calamities of God's church, must expect to have their doom, as aiders and abettors, with them that are instrumental in those calamities. The destruction of the Edomites was foretold by this prophet; Jer. xlix. 7, &c., and the people of God must encourage themselves against their present rudeness and insolence with the prospect of it. 1. It will be a shameful destruction; "'The cup' that 'shall pass unto thee' shall intoxicate thee;" (and that is shame enough to any man;) "'thou shalt be drunken,' quite infatuated, and at thy wits' end, shall stagger in all thy counsels, and stumble in all thy enterprises, and then, as Noah, when he was drunk, 'thou shalt make thyself naked,' and expose thyself to contempt." Note, Those who ridicule God's people, will justly be left to themselves to do that, some time or other, by which they will be made ridiculous. 2. It will be a righteous destruction; God will herein "visit thine iniquity," and "discover thy sins;" he will punish them, and, to justify himself therein, he will discover them, and make it to appear that he has just cause thus to proceed against them.—Henry.

CHAP. V. JEREMIAH'S PRAYER.—Ver. 1—6. The title of this chapter in the Vulgate, is The prayer of Jeremiah. It is an address to God respecting the calamities of his people, as the improvement of the preceding representation of them. It consists of the same number of stanzas as the preceding chapters; but they are much shorter, and the alphabetical order is not observed. A chorus of the Jews, or the collective body of the nation, are represented as calling on God to remember their miseries, and the reproach to which they were exposed. The inheritance, which he had given to their fathers, and the houses which they had builded on it, were possessed by the Chaldeans, and other aliens from the nation of Israel: they were bereaved of their fathers, and their mothers were left destitute widows, amidst the oppressions of their enemies; they were forced, in the land of their captivity, to pay dear even for water and fuel, which they formerly had for fetching; they were grievously oppressed and persecuted, and laboured for their tyrants, without respite for refreshment; they had repeatedly been obliged to submit to the Egyptians and Assyrians, through their urgent necessities; and at last some of them were destitute strangers in Egypt, and others were captive in the regions formerly governed by the Assyrians.—Scott.

EARNEST PRAYER.—Ver. 21. "Turn us to thee, O Lord." They had complained that God had forsaken and forgotten them, and then their prayer is not, "Turn thou to us," but "Turn us to thee;" which implies an acknowledgment that the cause of the distance was in themselves. God never leaves any till they first leave him, nor stands afar off from any longer than while they stand afar off from him; if, therefore, he turn them to him in a way of duty, no doubt but he will quickly return to them in a way of mercy. This agrees with that repeated prayer, Ps. lxxx. 3, 7, 19, "Turn us again, and then cause thy face to shine. Turn us" from our idols to thyself, by a sincere repentance and reformation, "and" then "we shall be turned." This implies a further acknowledgment of their own weakness and inability to turn themselves. There is in our nature a bent to backslide from God, but no disposition to return to him till his grace works in us both "to will and to do." So necessary is that grace, that we may truly say, "Turn us, or we shall not be turned;" but shall wander endlessly; and so powerful and effectual is that grace, that we may as truly say, "Turn us, and we shall be turned;" for it is a day of power, almighty power, in which God's people are made a "willing people," Ps. cx. 3. For restoring mercy; "Turn us to thee," and then "renew our days as of old," put us into the same happy state that our ancestors were in long ago, and that they continued long in; let it be with us as it was "at the first," and "at the beginning," Isa. i. 26. Note, If God by his grace renew our hearts, he will by his favour "renew our days," so that we shall "renew our youth as the eagle," Ps. ciii. 5.—Henry.

EZEKIEL.

EZEKIEL, like Jeremiah, was a priest as well as a prophet. He executed his office among the captives in Chaldea, during the latter part of the time that Jeremiah was employed at Jerusalem, and till some time after the destruction of that city.—He seems to have been carried into captivity with Jechoniah, and he dates his prophecies from that event, though he was not called to the prophetical office till the fifth year after, and probably in the thirtieth year of his age (i. 1), though some reckon this thirtieth year from Josiah's reformation, when he and Judah solemnly covenanted with God to be His people. The scope of his predictions was very similar to that of Jeremiah, but his manner was exceedingly different; for he delivered his messages with a vehemency, energy, and even terror and severity, peculiar to himself, but very suitable to the character of those to whom he prophesied; yet he seems to have been especially raised up to animate and encourage the pious remnant among the captives with the hope of returning prosperity; and to satisfy them that their condition was vastly preferable to that of their brethren in Judah, against whom he predicted still more tremendous judgments, terminating in the desolations of the temple of Jerusalem and Judah, and almost the extermination of the inhabitants.

The time of Ezekiel's prophecy, 1. His vision of four cherubims, 4, of four wheels, 15, and of the glory of GOD, 26.

NOW it came to pass [a]in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the [*]captives by the river of Chebar,[1] that [d]the heavens were opened, and [e]I saw visions of God.

2 In the fifth day of the month, (which was the [f]fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity,)

3 The [g]word of the LORD came expressly unto [†]Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans, by the river Chebar; [h]and the hand of the LORD was there upon him.

4 ¶ And I looked, and, behold, [i]a whirlwind came out of the north, [k]a great cloud, and a fire [‡]infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof as the [l]colour of amber,[2] out of the midst of the fire.

5 Also out of the midst thereof came [m]the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man.

6 And [n]every one had four faces, and [o]every one had four wings.

7 And their feet were [§]straight feet; the sole of their feet was [p]like the sole of a calf's foot: and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass.

8 And they had [r]the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings.

9 Their wings were [s]joined one to another; they turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward.

10 As [t]for the likeness of their faces, they four had [x]the face of a man and [y]the face of a lion on the right side; and they four had [z]the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had [a]the face of an eagle.

11 Thus were their faces: [b]and their wings were [*]stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, [c]and two covered their bodies.

12 And [d]they went every one straight forward: [e]whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went.

13 As for the likeness of the living creatures, [f]their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning.

14 And the living creatures [g]ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

15 ¶ Now, as I beheld the living creatures, behold [h]one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, [i]with his four faces.[4]

16 The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto [k]the colour of a beryl;[5] and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were [l]a wheel in the middle of a wheel.

17 When they went, they went upon their four sides; and [m]they turned not when they went.

18 As for their rings, [n]they were so high that they were dreadful; and their [†]rings were [o]full of eyes[6] round about them four.

19 And [p]when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them; and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up.

20 Whithersoever [q]the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them:[7] [r]for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.

21 When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit [‡]of the living creature was in the wheels.

22 And [s]the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as

CHAP. I. EZEKIEL THE PROPHET.—Ver. 1—3. Some interpreters compute this "thirtieth year" from the reformation in the reign of Josiah, when a new era commenced, and another trial was made of the kingdom of Judah. Others compute them from the accession of Nabopolassar to the throne of Babylon, which formed a new era to the Chaldeans, coincident with that of Josiah's reformation: but others think that the prophet only meant that he was thirty years of age before he was called to his important office. This was in the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, with whom Ezekiel seems to have been carried away; and consequently it was in the fifth year of Zedekiah's reign, about six years before the final desolations of Jerusalem. The captive Jews seem to have been left some time without prophets, or visions from God, that might supply the want of the more ordinary means of instruction, Jer. xxix; but at length the Lord raised them up a prophet in their captivity.—Ezekiel was among the other captives by the river Chebar, (which probably was some river that ran into the Euphrates,) where they might be stationed by the victors to cultivate waste lands, or to carry on some manufacture for their benefit. Here he saw the heavens opened, and the extraordinary appearance of the firmament made way for the visions of the God of Israel. Thus the word of the Lord came to him expressly, with clearness and conviction; so that he could neither doubt of of its divine authority, mistake its import, or question his appointment to the prophetical office. Some suppose that the personal Word, or Son of God, came and spake to him, in a distinct and audible voice, as doubtless he afterwards did.—This revelation was accompanied with "the hand of the LORD upon him." This may denote a divine power overcoming his reluctance to the arduous work, encouraging him to enter on it, and qualifying him for it. Or that he was so impressed by the power of God, as to have his senses closed to external objects, and his mind prepared to contemplate the heavenly visions.

THE SUBLIME VISION.—Ver. 5—14. Out of the midst of the glorious vision, the prophet saw the likeness of four living creatures. These seem to have been emblems, or an hieroglyphical representation of the holy angels, the attendants on the King of glory, and the ministers of his providence. They were four, probably to denote that they were employed in all the four quarters of the world, or to the four winds of heaven. Their appearance in the likeness of a man, denoted that they were intelligent and rational creatures, of which that form is to us the token. But each of them had four faces, which seem to be emblematic of their endowments and character. The face of a "man" implied that they possessed knowledge, foresight, prudence, compassion, and philanthropy; [illegible] and zeal in executing the will of God; that of [illegible] and perseverance; and that of an "eagle," spiritual sagacity and heavenly affections, by which they soared aloft above all created objects, to the uncreated source of holiness and felicity.—"Compare Revelation iv. 6, where our translation renders the word ζωα, beasts, whereas it should be rendered living creatures; the better to distinguish them from the anti-christian beast, always expressed in that book by θηρια."—"In that text the four living creatures denote some part of the christian church, as appears by comparing the place with Rev. v. 8, 9." [Lowth.] Indeed it seems capable of full proof that the ministers of the gospel are hieroglyphically described by the apostle; and this being evident, some learned men have concluded, probably on insufficient grounds, that Ezekiel's vision had a similar meaning. But the four faces which each of these living creatures had are divided, one to each, among the living creatures which the apostle saw: and this difference may imply, that the endowments, which are divided in various proportions among the holiest men on earth, are all conjoined in the holy angels.—These living creatures were also represented with four wings each; being emblematical of the activity and celerity with which they executed the Divine mandates; as their hands, "under their wings," were of their skilfulness or dexterity in all their services, of which at the same time they made no ostentation. "The hand being peculiar to mankind, among all living creatures, and the chief instrument of all artificial operations." [Lowth.]—Their wings being joined together, might denote the perfect unanimity which prevails among them; and their going straight forward without turning, their steadiness and constancy in obedience.—"They needed not to turn their bodies, that their faces might stand the way they were to go; for, go which way they would, they had a face that looked that way. This signifies that nothing ever diverted them from fulfilling God's commands." [Lowth.]—Their wings, "stretched upward," represented their promptitude to execute their Maker's orders, as those with which they covered their bodies did their conscious imperfection and meanness in his glorious presence. Their straight feet might be emblematical of simplicity and uprightness; as the sole of their feet, divided like that of the calf or other clean animals, might be of their perfect purity and holiness; and their "sparkling like the colour of burnished brass" seems to represent their superior excellency and dignity. They were also represented as going whether the Spirit was to go: which might signify the subserviency of their ministrations in the providential government of the world, to the great concerns of religion and the prosperity of the church. Their appearance was like burning coals of fire and the appearance of lamps: which might denote their ardent zeal and love, connected with equal knowledge and wisdom. The lamps, or lights, going up and down among the living creatures might indicate, that the Fountain of light communicated to them [illegible] and the bright fire [illegible] the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above.

23 And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies.

24 And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, [y]as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host: when they stood, they let down their wings.

25 And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads when they stood, and had let down their wings.

26 ¶ And above the firmament that was over their heads was [d]the likeness of a throne, [e]as the appearance of a sapphire-stone:[4] and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as [f]the appearance of a man[5] above upon it.

27 And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it; from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about.

28 As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. [k]This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the LORD. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

8 But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee: [o]Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee.

9 ¶ And when I looked, behold, [q]an hand was sent unto me; and, lo, [r]a roll of a book was therein;

10 And he [s]spread it before me: and it was written within and without:[3] and there was written therein [t]lamentations, and mourning, and woe.

CHAP. III.

Ezekiel eateth the roll, 1. God sheweth him the rule of prophecy, 15; and shutteth and openeth the prophet's mouth, 22.

MOREOVER, he said unto me, Son of man, [a]eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and [b]go speak unto the house of Israel.

2 So [c]I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll.[1]

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, [d]and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. [e]Then did I eat it; and [f]it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.

4 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, [g]go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them.

5 For [h]thou art not sent to a people *of a strange speech, and of an hard language, but to the house of Israel:

6 Not to many people of a strange speech, and of an hard language, whose words thou canst not understand: †surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened unto thee.

7 But the house of Israel [i]will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for [k]all the house of Israel are ‡impudent and hard-hearted.

8 Behold, [l]I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads.

9 As an adamant,[2] harder than flint, have I made thy forehead: fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

10 Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears.

11 And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto the children of thy people, and speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.

an emblem of the terrible effects of their ministry on the objects of the Divine vengeance; or it might signify the same, as their running and returning as a flash of lightning, with inexpressible velocity.—Scott.

THE WHEELS OF PROVIDENCE.—The dispensations of Providence are compared to "wheels," either the wheels of a chariot, in which the conqueror rides in triumph, or rather the wheels of a clock or watch, which all contribute to the regular motion of the machine. We read of "the course or wheel of nature," James iii. 6, which is here set before us under the direction of the God of nature. "Wheels," though they move not of themselves, as "the living creatures" do, are yet made moveable, and are almost continually kept in action. Providence, represented by these "wheels," produces changes; sometimes one spoke of the wheel is uppermost, and sometimes another; but the motion of the wheel on its own axle-tree, like that of the orbs above, is very regular and steady. The motion of the wheels is circular; by the revolutions of Providence things are brought to the same posture and pass which they were in formerly; for "the thing that is, is that which has been, and there is no new thing under the sun," Eccl. i. 9, 10. The "wheel" is said to be "by the living creatures," who attended it to direct its motion; for the angels are employed as the ministers of God's Providence, and have a greater hand in directing the motions of second causes to serve the divine purpose than we think they have. "Their appearance and their work" are likewise said to be "as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel." Observe here again, "Their appearance" to the prophet is designed to set forth what "their work" really is; men's "appearance and their work" often differ, but the "appearance" of God's providence and its "work" agree; if they seem to differ, it is through our ignorance and mistake.—Henry.

CHAP. II.—THE PROPHET'S NAME—"SON OF MAN." The title here given to Ezekiel, as often afterwards, is very observable; God, when he speaks to him, calls him, "Son of man," ver. 1, 3, "Son of Adam, Son of the earth." Daniel is once called so, Dan. viii. 17, and but once; the compellation is used to no other of the prophets, but to Ezekiel all along. We may take it, 1. As an humble, diminishing title; lest Ezekiel should be lifted up with the abundance of the revelations, he is put in mind of this, that still he is a "son of man," a mean, weak, mortal creature. Among other things made known to him, it was necessary he should be made to know this, that he was a "son of man," and [illegible] that it was wonderful condescension in God, that he was pleased thus to manifest [illegible] to him. Now he is among the living creatures, the angels, yet he must [illegible] himself a man, a dying creature. "What is man, or the son of man, that thou visitest, thus dignifiest? Though God had here a splendid retinue of holy angels about his throne, who were ready to go on his errands, yet he passes them all by, and pitches on Ezekiel, a "son of man," to be his messenger to the "house of Israel," for we "have this treasure in earthen vessels," and God's messages sent us by men like ourselves, whose terror shall not "make us afraid," nor "their hand be heavy upon us." Ezekiel was a priest, but the priesthood was brought low, and the honour of it laid in the dust: it therefore became him, and all of his order, to humble themselves, and to lie low, as sons of men, common men. He was now to be employed as a prophet, God's ambassador, and a ruler over the kingdoms, Jer. i. 10, a post of great honour, but he must remember that he is a "son of man," and whatever good he did, it was not by any might of his own, for he was a "son of man," but in the strength of divine grace, which must therefore have all the glory.—Henry.

CHAP. III—EATING OF THE ROLL.—Ver. 1—3. The Lord Christ, the eternal Word, from his throne, here continues to speak to his prophet. He ordered him to eat what he found; that is, to receive into his mind and heart, the revelations made to him, without objecting to any part of them. He was to receive the truths of God as the food of his soul, and to feed upon them by faith, and with a spiritual relish; and whatever he thus found, would prove wholesome and nutrimental. When he had eaten the roll of the book, he was ordered to go and speak to the house of Israel. Accordingly he opened his mouth, and the Lord fed him with the roll; as an emblem, that he communicates his truth to all whose hearts are prepared to receive it. He must also meditate upon every part of this roll, that his judgment might be formed on it, his memory stored with it, and his affections regulated by it; as the stomach digests, and the bowels assimilate the food for the nourishment of our bodies. Accordingly he did so; and the roll, though written within and without with lamentations, and mourning, and wo, was in his mouth as honey for sweetness. The revelation of future events, and the meditation on the truths of God's word, were very pleasant; and perhaps the first thoughts of being honoured as a prophet were agreeable: but when he afterwards considered what predictions and denunciations he was to deliver to the people; that these would increase their condemnation; and that he would be hated and persecuted on this account, his spirit was much embittered.—Scott.

THE PROPHET—A WATCHMAN.—Ver. 17. "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman to the house of Israel." The vision he saw astonished him, he knew not what to make of that, and therefore God used this plain expression, which served [illegible] him to the understanding of it. [illegible] captivity, and that such, [illegible]

12 Then [s]the spirit took me up,[2] and I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, [u]Blessed be the glory of the LORD from his place.

13 I heard also [y]the noise of the wings of the living creatures that [z]touched one another, [a]and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing.

14 So [b]the spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went [1]in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit; [b]but the hand of the LORD was strong upon me.

15 ¶ Then I came to them of the captivity at Telabib,[3] that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days.

16 And it came to pass at the end of seven days, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, 17 Son of man, I have made thee [f]a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me.

18 When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

19 Yet [m]if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, [n]he shall die in his iniquity; [o]but thou hast delivered thy soul.

20 Again, [p]When a righteous man doth turn from his *righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock before him, he shall die: [r]because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, [s]and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered: [t]but his blood will I require at thine hand.

21 Nevertheless, [u]if thou warn the righteous[4] man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; [y]also thou hast delivered thy soul.

22 ¶ And [z]the hand of the LORD was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee.

23 Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, [b]the glory of the LORD stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar: and I fell on my face.

24 Then [c]the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, shut thyself within thine house.

25 But thou, O son of man, behold, [g]they shall put bands upon thee, and shall bind thee with them, and thou shalt not go out among them:

26 And [h]I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb,[5] [1]and shalt not be to them [‡]a reprover; [k]for they are a rebellious house.

27 But when I speak with thee, [†]I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, [m]Thus saith the Lord GOD, He that heareth, let him hear; and he that forbeareth, let him forbear; for they are a rebellious house.

watchman," and has something to say to them; he is appointed to be as "a watchman" in the city, to guard against fire, robbers, and disturbers of the peace, as "a watchman" over the flock, to guard against thieves and beasts of prey; but especially as "a watchman" in the camp, in an invaded country or a besieged town, that is, to watch the motions of the enemy, and to sound an alarm upon the approach, nay, upon the first appearance of danger. This supposed "the house of Israel" to be in a military state, and exposed to enemies, who are subtle and restless in their attempts upon it; yea, and each of the particular members of that house to be in danger, and concerned to stand upon their guard. Note, Ministers are "watchmen on the church's walls," Isa. lxii. 6; "watchmen that go about the city," Cant. iii. 3. It is a toilsome office; watchmen must keep awake, be they ever so sleepy, and keep abroad, be it ever so cold; they must stand all weathers "upon the watch-tower," Isa. xxi. 8; Gen. xxxi. 40. It is a dangerous office; sometimes they cannot keep their post, but are in peril of death from the enemy, who gain their point if they kill the sentinel; and yet they dare not quit their post upon pain of death from their general; such a dilemma are the church's watchmen in; men will curse them if they be faithful, and God will curse them if they be false. But it is a needful office; "the house of Israel" cannot be safe without watchmen, and yet, "except the Lord keep" it, "the watchmen waketh but in vain," Ps. cxxvii. 1, 2. —Henry.

THE WATCHMAN'S DUTIES.—Ver. 19. The watchmen were stationed to keep a constant look out, that they might discern the enemy or danger at a distance, and warn the people to avoid or repel them; but if they neglected to watch or to give warning, they would be chargeable with the murder of such as perished through their negligence. In like manner, a sentinel in the army, though often exposed to danger from the enemy, is in greater danger from his commander, if he desert his post, or do not attend to his duty. But if the watchman give notice of the approaching danger, and the people neglected to profit by the warning; they might indeed be cut off, but he would be guiltless. Thus the Lord had appointed the prophet to observe and to report to his people, the dangers to which their sins exposed them: this he was required to do, by hearing the word of the Lord, and warning them from him. And if he did not fairly report to the wicked the sentence of death and destruction, which the Lord had passed upon them; warning them to repent and turn from their wicked ways, that they might save their lives; they would then be cut off by divine judgments in their sins, and the prophet would be condemned as their murderer. But if he gave the wicked fair warning, and they still went on in their sins and perished; he would be free from guilt, and not be considered as accessary to their ruin. So that there were sufficient reasons, why he should be very faithful, though exposed to much contempt and persecution, and apparently unsuccessful; as this would be the only way, in which he could avoid being involved in the guilt and ruin of his people. "The wicked man shall die in a state of sin, and be condemned to those punishments, to which death translates sinners, John viii. 24. Thou shalt be justly accountable for the loss of his soul, just as a man's blood is laid to the charge of him, that is any ways accessary to his death." [Lowth.]—Scott.

CHAP. IV. SYMBOLS OF THE SIEGE OF JERUSALEM—THE TILE AND THE NAUSEOUS DIET.—Ver. 1—8. This seems to have been a real transaction, and not a vision; and all objections to this construction, taken from the uneasiness of the prophet in the situation here described, arise from forgetfulness of the power of God, who can render his servants easy in any situation.—He was ordered to draw a picture of Jerusalem on a tile, (an emblem of the meanness to which sin had reduced that holy city, and the speedy destruction that awaited it;) that so by a general likeness every spectator might know what city was intended. He was then directed to place around it the similitude of those engines and works, that were used in sieges; and to take an iron pan, or a circular piece of iron, to place round the city as a wall; denoting the fortifications of Jerusalem, and the obstinate defence that would be made by its inhabitants. He himself represented the besiegers, by setting his face against the picture of the city. For three hundred and ninety days he was ordered to lie on his left side: these days denoted so many years; and may be calculated from the establishment of idolatry by Jeroboam in the kingdom of Israel, to the final desolations of the whole land by Nebuzaradan, in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar, which the best chronologers compute to have been exactly three hundred and ninety years, Jer. lii. 30. In the siege of Jerusalem, and the ruin of the nation, they bare the punishment of their iniquity committed during those years; and Ezekiel, by lying so long on his left side, as a sign to them, typically bore it for them.—When he had accomplished those days, he was ordered to lie forty more, on his right side; which represented the forty years that intervened betwixt Josiah's reformation, and the same final desolations of the land, and were the more immediate cause of that catastrophe.—Some think that these four hundred and thirty days relate also to the days of the siege, deducting some time for the departure of the besiegers, when they went to fight with the Egyptians: but this is uncertain.—The prophet was thus required to set himself against Jerusalem, and to make bare, or stretch out, his arm, to represent the force and fury with which the Chaldeans would conduct the siege. By this sign he prophesied against it; and the Lord would lay bands on him; that is, he would powerfully enable, and even constrain, him, to lie quietly in the posture appointed

10 And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be [o]by weight, twenty shekels a day: from time to time shalt thou eat it.

11 Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of an hin: [5] from time to time shalt thou drink.

12 And thou shalt eat it as barley cakes, and thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight.

13 And the LORD said, [p]Even thus shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread [q] among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them.

14 Then said I, [q]Ah Lord GOD! behold, [r]my soul hath not been polluted; for from my youth up, even till now, [s]have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces: neither came there [t]abominable flesh [7] into my mouth.

15 Then he said unto me, Lo, I have given thee cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith.

16 Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, behold, [u]I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem: and they shall [x]eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment:

17 That they may want bread and water, and be astonied one with another, [y]and consume away for their iniquity.

Under the type of hair, 1, is shewed the judgment of Jerusalem for their rebellion, 5, by famine, sword, and dispersion, 12.

AND thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, [a]take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head, and upon thy beard: [b]then take thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair.

2 Thou [c]shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of [d]the city, [e]when the days of the siege are fulfilled; and thou shalt take a third part, and smite about it with a knife; and a third part thou shalt scatter in the wind: and [f]I will draw out a sword after them.

3 Thou shalt also take thereof [g]a few in number, and bind them in thy *skirts.

4 Then [h]take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire, and burn them in the fire; for thereof [i]shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.

5 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [k]This is Jerusalem: [l]I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her.

6 And [m]she hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her; [n]for they have refused my judgments and my statutes, they have not walked in them.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Because ye multiplied more than the nations [1] that are round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, [o]neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you;

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I, [p]even I, am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee [q]in the sight of the nations.

9 And I will do in thee [r]that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, [2] because of all thine abominations.

10 Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers: and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds.

11 Wherefore, [u]as I live, saith the Lord GOD, Surely, because [x]thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thine abominations, therefore [z]will I also diminish thee; [a]neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity.

12 ¶ A [b]third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee; and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; [c]and I will scatter a third part into all the winds: [d]and I will draw out a sword after them.

13 Thus [e]shall mine anger be accomplished, and [f]I will cause my fury to rest upon them, [g]and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the LORD have [h]spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them.

14 Moreover, [i]I will make thee waste, and a reproach among [k]the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by.

15 So it shall be a reproach and a taunt, [l]an instruction and an astonishment, unto the nations that are round about thee, [m]when I shall execute judgments in thee in anger and in fury, and in furious rebukes. I the LORD have spoken it.

16 When I shall send upon them [n]the evil arrows of famine, [3] which shall be for their destruction, and which I will send to destroy you: and I will increase the famine upon you, and will break your staff of bread:

17 So will I send upon you famine and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; [q]and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee; [r]and I will bring the sword upon thee. [s]I the LORD have spoken it.

hun, till the days were accomplished. Ver. 9—17. To show how the Jews would be reduced to feed on such things, as at other times they would have nauseated, and that they would be constrained to disregard the distinction betwixt clean and unclean meats; he was ordered to use human dung, as fuel in baking the cakes, and to do it in the sight of the people that they might know it.—The prophet seems not to have objected to any other part of the Lord's injunctions, except this. He did not urge, that the representation of the siege would expose him to contempt; that it would subject him to reproach, thus to appear as the enemy of Jerusalem; that the allotted provisions were so coarse and scanty, that his health would be ruined by living so long on them; or that the posture, in which he was to lie would be very painful and distressing. In all these respects he unreservedly acquiesced: but supposing, that by this last appointment he should contract ceremonial defilement; he objected that he had never been used to pollute his soul by eating any thing unclean, from his youth up to that day. And though his scruple was groundless, yet the Lord condescended to allow him to use cow's dung for fuel, instead of human dung. By the subsequent explication it appears, that though the hardships to be endured by the captives might be included; yet that the famine, which raged in Jerusalem during the siege, was principally intended. Then the Lord would break the staff of bread, which is the chief support of life: and their bread and water being measured to them in very small quantities, they must eat and drink with astonishment; perceiving how fast their scanty stock of provisions wasted, and how soon they were likely to perish miserably by hunger.—Scott.

CHAP. V. ANOTHER SYMBOL—THE RAZOR AND HAIR.—Ver. 1—4. This command seems to have been given about the same time as the foregoing. The barber's razor was to be used in shaving his head and beard; the sharp knife or sword, in smiting a division of the hair: or it may be rendered, "take thee a sharp knife, even take thee a barber's razor;" the former may be understood of any sort of sharp instrument, the latter describing the kind. Jerusalem had been the head of the nation of Israel, and the most favoured city upon earth: her numerous inhabitants were her ornament and strength, as the hair is the ornament of the head, and the beard is the token of manhood. But the city was to be desolated and levelled with the ground: as the head is bared when the hair and beard are shaven off. Then her ornament and strength were taken away: and as the shaving of the Nazarite disannulled his vow; so perhaps this indicated that the token of her consecration to God was destroyed by her sins. This showed the severity of the judgments of God; and the weighing of the hair intimated the strict justice and exact wisdom, in which the inhabitants of Jerusalem were consigned to their several punishments. The third part of the hair, which was burned with fire in the midst of the city, (that is, the picture of the city, before mentioned,) at the end of the siege (or the days which the prophet lay before it,) denoted, that a third part of the Jews, who had taken refuge in Jerusalem, would perish by famine, pestilence, or conflagrations, during the siege, or when it was terminated: the third part, smitten with a knife or sword, represented those who were slain by the besiegers in attempting to escape; and the third part scattered in the wind, represented those who fled or were carried captives into other countries, who would be pursued by the justice of God and the cruelty of their enemies, into every place. A few hairs which the prophet bound in his skirts, as if they were to be preserved, of which some were afterwards cast into the fire, signified the remnant who were left in the land under Gedaliah, and seemed to have acquired a settlement; till the murder of Gedaliah, and the flight of the rest into Egypt, overturned the whole design. Most of them perished miserably: and the Chaldeans, exasperated by their defection to the Egyptians, seem to have treated the other Jews with greater severity on their account, and to have utterly desolated the land.—Scott.

UNEXAMPLED PUNISHMENT.—Ver. 10. "The fathers shall eat the sons, and the sons shall eat the fathers," through the extremity of the famine, or compelled to do it by their barbarous conquerors. Some shall be taken away by the plague; ver. 12, the "pestilence shall pass through thee," ver. 17, sweeping all before it, as the destroying angel; others "shall be consumed with famine," shall gradually waste away as men in a consumption. "I will increase it, and will break your staff of bread;" will take away the necessary supports of life, will disappoint you of all that which you depend upon, so that there is no remedy, but you must fall to the ground." Life is frail, is weak, is burthened, so that, if it have not daily bread for its staff to lean upon, it cannot but sink, and is soon gone if that staff be broken. Others "shall fall by the sword round about" Jerusalem, when they sally out upon the besiegers; it is a "sword," which God "will bring," ver. 17. The sword of the Lord, that used to be drawn for Jerusalem's defence, is now drawn for its destruction. Others are devoured by "evil beasts," which will make a prey of those that fly for shelter to the deserts and mountains; they shall meet their ruin where they expected refuge, for there is no escaping the judgments of God, ver. 17. And, lastly, those who escape shall be "scattered into" all parts of the world, "into all the winds," (so it is expressed, ver. 10, 12,) intimating that they should not only be dispersed, but hurried, and tossed, and driven to and fro, as "chaff before the wind." Nay, and Cain's curse (to be fugitives and vagabonds) is not the worst of it neither, their restless life shall be cut off by a bloody death; "I will draw out a sword after them," which shall follow them wherever they go.—Henry.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face toward [b]the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them,

3 And say, [c]Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord GOD; Thus saith the Lord GOD [d]to the mountains and to the hills,[1] to the rivers and to the valleys, Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, [e]and I will destroy your high places;

4 And your altars shall be desolate, and your [*]images shall be broken; [f]and I will cast down your slain men before your idols.

5 And I will [†]lay the dead carcases of the children of Israel before their idols;[2] and I will scatter your bones round about your altars.

6 In all your dwelling places [h]the cities shall be laid waste, [i]and the high places shall be desolate; that [k]your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and [l]your works may be abolished.

7 And the slain shall fall in the midst of you; [m]and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

8 ¶ Yet [n]will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries.

9 And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives, because I am broken with their whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their eyes, which go a whoring after their idols: [o]and they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations.

10 And [p]they shall know that I am the LORD, and that I have not said in vain that I would do this evil unto them.

11 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [q]Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, [r]Alas for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel! for they shall [s]fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence.

12 He that is [t]far off shall die of the pestilence; and he that is near shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth and is besieged shall die by the famine: [u]thus will I accomplish my fury upon them.

13 Then shall ye know that I am the LORD, when their slain men shall be among their idols round about their altars, upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols.

14 So [d]will I stretch out my hand upon them, and make the land desolate; yea, [‡]more desolate than the wilderness toward [e]Diblath,[3] in all their habitations: and they shall know that I am the LORD.

CHAP. VI. APPROPRIATE PUNISHMENT OF IDOLATRY.—Ver. 3—6. The idols and all their appurtenances should be destroyed. The "high places," which were on the tops of mountains, these shall be levelled "and made desolate," they shall not be beautified, shall not be frequented as they had been; the "altars," on which they offered sacrifice and burnt incense to strange gods, "shall be broken" to pieces and "laid waste;" the "images" and "idols" shall be defaced, "shall be broken and cease," and be cut down, and all the fine costly works about them shall be abolished. Observe here, 1. That war makes woful desolations, which those persons, places, and things, that were esteemed most sacred, cannot escape; for "the sword devours one as well as another." 2. That God sometimes ruins idolaters even by the hands of idolaters, for such the Chaldeans themselves were; but, as if the deity were a local thing, the greatest admirers of the gods of their own country were the greatest despisers of the gods of other countries. 3. It is just with God to make that a desolation, which we make an idol of; for he is a jealous God, and will not bear a rival. 4. If men do not, as they ought, destroy idolatry, God will, first or last, find out a way to do it. When Josiah had destroyed the high places, altars, and images, with the sword of justice, they set them up again; but God will now destroy them with the sword of war, and let us see who dares re-establish them.

PENITENCE.—Ver. 9. "They shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations." Thus God will give them grace to qualify them for pardon and deliverance. His goodness takes occasion from their badness to appear the most illustrious. Note, 1. True penitents see sin to be an abominable thing, that "abominable thing which the Lord hates," and which makes sinners, and even their services, odious to him, Jer. xliv. 4; Isa. i. 11. It defiles the sinner's own conscience, and makes him, unless he be past feeling, an abomination to himself. An idol is particularly called "an abomination," Isa. xliv. 19. Those gratifications which the hearts of sinners were set upon as delectable things, the hearts of penitents are turned against as detestable things. 2. There are many "evils committed in these abominations," many included in them, attendant on them, and flowing from them; many transgressions in one sin, Lev. xvi. 21. In their idolatries they were sometimes guilty of whoredom, as in the worship of Peor; sometimes of murder, as in the worship of Moloch: these were "evils committed in their abominations." Or, it denotes the great malignity there is in sin; it is an abomination that has abundance of evil in it. 3. Those that truly loathe sin, cannot but loathe themselves because of sin; self-loathing is ever more the companion of true repentance. Penitents quarrel with themselves, and can never be reconciled to themselves till they have some ground to hope that God is reconciled to them; nay, then they shall lie down in their shame, when he is pacified toward them, Ezek. xvi. 1. —Henry.

CHAP. VII. THE END.—Ver. 2—6. "Now is the end come upon thee; the end" which all their wickedness had a tendency to, and which God had often told them it would come to at last, when by his prophets he asked them, "What will ye do in the end thereof? The end," which all the foregoing judgments had been working toward, as means to bring it about; their ruin shall now be completed; or, "the end," that is, the period of their state, the final destruction of their nation; as the deluge was "the end of all flesh," Gen. vi. 13. They had flattered themselves with hopes that they should shortly "see an end" of their troubles; "Yea," says God, "'an end is come,' but a miserable one, not 'the expected end,'" (which is promised to the pious remnant among them, Jer. xxix. 11,) "'it is the end, that end' which you have been so often warned of; 'that last end,' which Moses wished you to 'consider,' Deut. xxxii. 29, and which because 'Jerusalem remembered not, therefore she came down wonderfully.'" Lam. i. 9. This end was long in coming, but "now it is come." Though the ruin of sinners comes slowly, it comes surely. "'It is come,' it watches for thee, ready to receive thee." This perhaps looks further, to the last destruction of that nation by the Romans, which that by the Chaldeans was an earnest of; and still further, to the final destruction of the world of the ungodly. "The end of all things is at hand;" and Jerusalem's last end was a type of "the end of the world," Matt. xxiv. 3. Oh that we could all see that end of time and days very near, and the end of our own time and days much nearer, that we may secure a happy lot "in the end of the days!" Dan. xii. 13. This "end comes upon the four corners of the land;" the ruin, as it shall be final, so it shall be total; no part of the land shall escape: no, not that which lies most remote; such will the destruction of the world be; all these things shall be dissolved; such will the destruction of sinners be; none can avoid it. "O that the wickedness of the wicked" might "come to an end," before it bring them to "an end."

ABUSE OF ORDINANCES PUNISHED BY THEIR REMOVAL.—Ver. 20. The phrase, "As for the beauty of his ornament," seems to refer to that "holy and beautiful house," where "they and their fathers praised God," Isa. lxiv. 11. It was called the "beauty of holiness," and that is the beauty of its ornament; it was also adorned with gold and gifts; as for this, "he set it in majesty," every thing was contrived to make it magnificent, that it might help to make the people of Israel the more illustrious among their neighbours. "He built his sanctuary like high palaces," Ps. lxxviii. 69, it was a "glorious high throne from the beginning," Jer. xvii. 12. But the great dishonour they had 16 ¶ But they that escape of them shall escape, and shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys,[3] all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity.

Ezekiel's vision of the image of jealousy, 1, and of the chambers of imagery, 7.

AND it came to pass ᵃin the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month,[1] as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, ᵇthat the hand of the Lord GOD fell there upon me.

2 Then ᶜI beheld, and lo a likeness as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins, even downward, fire; and from his loins, even upward, as the appearance of brightness, as the colour of amber.

3 And ᵈhe put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and ᵉthe spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north; where was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.[2]

4 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I saw in the plain.

5 ¶ Then said he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold northward at the gate of the altar this image of jealousy in the entry.

6 He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, ᶠthat I should go far off from my sanctuary? But turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see ᵍgreater abominations.

7 ¶ And he brought me to the door of the court; and, when I looked, behold a hole in the wall.

8 Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and, when I had digged in the wall, behold a door.

9 And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here.

10 So I went in and saw; and, behold, ʰevery form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, pourtrayed upon the wall round about.

11 And there stood before them ⁱseventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel,[3] and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of ᵏShaphan, with every man his censer in his hand: and a thick cloud of incense went up.

12 Then said he unto me, Son of man, ˡhast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, ᵐThe LORD seeth us not; the LORD hath forsaken the earth.

[2] This is a prelude to the visions, which describe the various idolatries of the house of Israel, where, in the noblest stretch of an inspired imagination, idolatry is itself personified and made an idol, and the image sublimely called "the image of jealousy," which the prophet explains by observing, that "it was that which provoked God to jealousy." He then proceeds to the various scenery of the inspired vision.—WARBURTON.

done to God in profaning his sanctuary; they "made the images of their" counterfeit deities, which they set up in rivalship with God, and which are here called "their abominations," and "their detestable things," (for so they were to God, and so they should have been to them,) and these "they set up" in God's temple, than which a greater affront could not be put upon him. And therefore, it is here threatened that they shall be deprived of the temple; and it shall be no succour to them, "Therefore have I set it far from them," sent them far from it, so that it is out of the reach of their services, and they out of the reach of its influences. Note, God's ordinances, and the privileges of a profession of religion, will justly be taken away from those that despise and profane them. Nay, they shall not only be kept at a distance from the temple, but the temple itself shall be involved in the common desolation, ver. 21; the Chaldeans who are "strangers," and therefore have no veneration for it, who are "the wicked of the earth," and therefore have an antipathy to it, shall "have it for a prey" and for "a spoil;" all the ornaments and treasures of it shall fall into their hands, who will make no difference between that and other plunder. This was a grief to the saints in Zion, who complained of nothing so much as of that which "the enemy did wickedly in the sanctuary, Ps. lxxiv. 3; but it was the punishment of the sinners in Zion, who by profaning the temple with "strange gods," provoked God to suffer it to be profaned by "strange nations," and to "turn his face from them that did it," as if he had not seen them and their crimes; and from them that deprecated it, as not regarding them and their prayers. Let the soldiers do as they will, let them "enter into the secret place," into the holy of holies, as robbers, let them strip it, let them pollute it, its defence is departed, and then farewell all its glory. Note, Those are unworthy to be honoured with the form of godliness, who will not be governed by the power of godliness.

No DELIVERANCE FOR THE WICKED.—Ver. 26. Since they had disappointed God's expectations from them, God would disappoint their expectations from him. For, 1. They shall not have "the deliverance out of their troubles" that they expect. They shall "seek peace;" they shall desire it, and pray for it, they shall endeavour it, and expect it, but "there shall be none;" their attempts both to court their enemies, and to conquer them, shall be in vain, and their troubles shall grow worse and worse. 2. They shall not have the direction in the trouble that they expect. "They shall seek a vision of the prophet," shall desire, for their support under their troubles, to be assured of a happy issue out of them; they did not desire a vision to reprove them for sin, or to warn them of danger, but to promise them deliverance; such messages they longed to hear; but "the law shall perish from the priest," he shall have no words either of counsel or comfort to say to them: they would not hear what God had to say to them by way of conviction, and therefore he has nothing to say to them by way of encouragement. "Counsel shall perish from the ancients;" the elders of the people that should advise them what to do in this difficult juncture, shall be infatuated and at their wits' end. It is bad with a people when those that should be their counsellors, know not how to consider within themselves, consult with one another, or counsel them.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. HIDDEN CHAMBERS OF IMAGERY.—Ver. 7—12. When the prophet had been conducted to some door of the court of the temple; he found a wall, which seems to have been built in order to conceal the idolatries, secretly practised by the elders in the chambers of the temple, which had been coverted into a sort of chapel for that purpose. But when he had examined this wall, he discovered a hole: and being ordered to dig or to work at it to make it larger, he found a door that had been walled up; by which he was commanded to enter. There he saw all kinds of reptiles and unclean beasts, such as the Egyptians used to worship; and the idols, that Israel or Judah had ever worshipped, painted all around upon the wall; and before them seventy men of the elders of Israel, (according to the number of the sanhedrim, or great council of the nation,) were collected together. One of them he knew to be Jaazaniah, (who perhaps was president of the council, or a very eminent man among them,) and there were they, as consecrated priests of this rabble of dunghill gods, every man with his censer in his hand, lavishly burning incense and presenting their adorations. This indeed was shown to the prophet "in a vision;" but such was the actual conduct of the rulers and elders of Judah, in their dark recesses in the chambers of the temple, which they secretly appropriated to their images; and, as some think, in the private chambers of their own houses also. For they concluded, that the Lord did not see them, and that he had forsaken the earth, or "the land." He did not deliver the people out of their difficulties; because they continued in sin, and had not sought him with sincere repentance, faith, and prayer, but merely in hypocrisy: and they concluded that he either could not, or would not, help them; and that they were authorized to seek help from some other quarter, as Saul did to his own destruction. Nay, they seem to have questioned the existence, or the omnipresence and omniscience, of JEHOVAH: they concluded that no good would come from waiting on him, nor any harm from forsaking him; and they determined to seek help from those idols, whose licentious characters and worship they loved, in proportion as they hated the holy character, worship, and service of God!—Scott.

SENSUAL IDOLATRY.—Ver. 14. "Women weeping for Tammuz." An abominable thing indeed, that any should choose rather to serve an idol in tears than to serve the true God "with joyfulness and gladness of heart!" Yet such absurdities as these are they guilty of who "follow after lying vanities," and "forsake their own mercies." Some think it was for Adonis, an idol among the Greeks, others for Osiris, an idol of the Egyptians, that they shed these tears. The image, they say, was made to weep, and then the worshippers wept with it. They bewailed the death of this Tammuz, and anon rejoiced in its returning to life again. These mourning women "sat at the door of the gate of the Lord's house," and there shed their idolatrous tears, as it were in defiance of God and the sacred rites of his worship; and some think, with their idolatry, prostrating themselves also to corporeal whoredom; for these two, commonly, went together; and they that dishonoured the divine nature by the one, were justly "given up to vile affections" and a reprobate sense, to dishonour the human nature, which nowhere ever sunk so far below itself as in these idolatrous rites.

GREAT PROVOCATION.—Ver. 17. "Hast thou seen this, O son of Man," and couldst thou have thought ever to see such things done in the temple of the Lord? Now, 1. He appeals to the prophet himself concerning the heinousness of the crime. 2. He aggravates it from the fraud and oppression that were to be found in all parts of the nation; "They have filled the land with violence." It is not strange if they that wrong God thus, make no conscience of wronging one another, and with all that is sacred trample likewise upon all that is just. And their wickedness in their conversations made even the worship they paid to their own God an abomination, Isa. i. 11, &c. They "return to provoke me," (they repeat the provocation, do it, and do it again,) "and lo, they put the branch to their nose;" a proverbial expression, denoting perhaps their scoffing at God, and having him in derision; they snuffed at his service, as men do when they "put a branch to their nose." Or it was some custom used by idolaters in honour of the idols they served. We read of garlands used in their idolatrous worships, Acts xiv. 13, out of which every zealot took a branch, which they smelled to as a nosegay.—Henry.

CHAP. IX. THE MAN WITH THE INKHORN.—Ver. 1, 2. Many interpreters explain this to mean Christ, our High Priest and King, who presides over all the desolations on earth, in order to preserve his chosen people; and who seals them by his Spirit, and writes their names in his book of life. But if this were the Word, and Son of God, what shall we make of the "likeness of a man" upon the throne, from whence these orders were issued? It seems therefore more agreeable to the context to suppose that Christ the King of Israel, from the throne, gave these orders; and that the man with the inkhorn represented an angel, or the angels that were employed to protect the pious remnant of the Jews from the Chaldeans; and his priestly garment might denote, that their preservation was owing to the priesthood and sacrifice of him that was to come, Rev. xv. 5, 6. These persons went into the court of the temple, and stood beside the brazen altar. "To denote that the men ordained to destruction were offered up as so many sacrifices, to make atonement to God's justice." [Lowth.]—Scott.

THE MARK.—Ver. 4. "Set a mark upon" their "foreheads." 1. To signify that God owns them for his, and he will confess them another day. A work of grace in the soul is to God "a mark upon the forehead," which he will acknowledge as his mark, and by which "he knows them that are his." 2. To give to them who are thus marked an assurance of God's favour, that they may know it themselves; and the comfort of knowing it will be the most powerful support and cordial in calamitous times. Why should we perplex ourselves about this temporal life, if we know by the mark that we have eternal life? 3. To be a direction to the destroyers whom to pass by, as the blood upon the door-posts was an indication that that was an Israelite's house, and the first-born there must not be slain. Note, Those who keep themselves pure in times of common iniquity, God will keep safe in times of common calamity. They that distinguish themselves shall be distinguished.

THE SLAUGHTER.—Ver. 5—7. Note, If the servants of God's house defile it with their idolatries, God will justly suffer the enemies of it to defile it with their violences, Ps. lxxix. 1. But these acts of necessary justice were really, whatever they were ceremonially, rather a purification than a pollution of the sanctuary; it was "putting away evil from among them." Wherever sin has gone before, judgment will follow after; and though "judgment begins at the house of God," yet it shall not end there. The holy city shall no more be a protection to the wicked people than the holy house was to the wicked priests. They also observed their orders, and, 1. "They began at the" elders, "the ancient men that were before the house," and slew them first, either those seventy ancients who worshipped idols in their chambers, chap. viii. 12, or those twenty-five who "worshipped the sun between the porch and the altar," who might more properly be said to be "before the house." Note, Ringleaders in sin may expect to be first met with by the judgments of God; and the sins of those who are in the most eminent and public stations call for the most exemplary punishments.—Henry.

CHAP. X. THE CHERUBIM.—Ver. 5. The cherubims made a dreadful sound with their wings. The vibration of them, as of the strings of musical instruments, made a curious melody; bees, and other winged insects, make a noise with their wings. Probably this intimated their preparing to remove, by stretching forth and lifting up their wings, which made this noise as it were to give warning of it. This noise is said to be as "the voice of the Almighty God when he speaks," as the thunder, which is called "the voice of the Lord," Ps. xxix. 3, or "as the voice of the Lord" when he spake to Israel on that was between the cherubims, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was clothed with linen; who took it, [r]and went out.

8 ¶ And there appeared in the cherubims [s]the form of a man's hand under their wings.

9 And when I looked, [t]behold the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub: and the appearance of the wheels was [u]as the colour of a beryl-stone.

10 And as for their appearances, they four had one likeness,[2] [x]as if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel.

11 When they went, [y]they went upon their four sides; they turned not as they went, but to the place [z]whither the head looked they followed it; they turned not as they went.

12 And their whole body, [§]and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, [a]were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had.

13 As for the wheels, ‖it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel![3]

14 And [b]every one had four faces:[4] the first face was the face of a cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle.

15 And the cherubims were [c]lifted up. [d]This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar.

16 And [e]when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them; and when the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them.

17 When they stood, these stood; and when they were lifted up, these lifted up themselves also: [f]for the spirit [*]of the living creature was in them.

18 Then [g]the glory of the LORD departed from off the threshold of the house, [h]and stood over the cherubims.[5]

19 And [i]the cherubims lifted up their wings, and mounted up from the earth in my sight: when they went out, the wheels also were beside them; and every one stood at the door [k]of the east gate of the LORD's house; and the glory of the GOD of Israel was over them above.

20 This is [m]the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; [n]and I knew that they were the cherubims.

21 Every one [o]had four faces apiece, and every one four wings; [p]and the likeness of the hands of a man was under their wings.

22 And [q]the likeness of their faces was the same faces which I saw by the river of Chebar, their appearances and themselves: [r]they went every one straight forward.

The princes' presumption, 1; their sin and judgment, 4. Of God's saving a remnant, &c., 14.

MOREOVER, [s]the spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the east gate of the LORD's house, which looketh eastward: and behold at the door of the gate five and twenty men; among whom I saw [d]Jaazaniah the son of Azur, and [e]Pelatiah the son of Benaiah, princes of the people.[1]

2 Then said he unto me, Son of man, [f]these are the men that devise mischief, and give wicked counsel in this city;

3 Which say, [*]It is not near; let us build houses: this city is the caldron,[2] and we be the flesh.

4 ¶ Therefore prophesy against them, prophesy, O son of man.

5 And [k]the Spirit of the LORD fell upon me, and said unto me, Speak; Thus saith the LORD, Thus have ye said, O house of Israel: [n]for I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them.

6 Ye have multiplied your slain in this city, and ye have filled the streets thereof with the slain.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [p]Your slain, whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron: [q]but I will bring you forth out of the midst of it.

8 Ye have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you, saith the Lord GOD.

9 And I will bring you out of the midst thereof, and deliver you into the hands of strangers, [t]and will execute judgments among you.

10 Ye shall [u]fall by the sword: I will judge you in the border of Israel;[3] [y]and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

11 This [z]city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof; but I will judge you in the border of Israel:

12 And ye shall know that I am the LORD: [†]for ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments, [a]but have done after the manners of the heathen that are round about you.

13 ¶ And it came to pass, [b]when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died:[4] [c]then fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said, [d]Ah Lord GOD! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

mount Sinai; and "therefore" he then gave the law with abundance of terror, to signify with what terror he would reckon for the violation of it, which he was now about to do. This noise of their "wings was heard even to the outer court," the court of the people; for the Lord's voice in his judgments "cries in the city," which those may hear that do not, as Ezekiel, see the visions of them.

ARRANGEMENTS OF PROVIDENCE. Ver. 9—17. Observe here, 1. That this world is subject to turns and changes, and various resolutions; the course of affairs in it is represented by "wheels," sometimes one spoke is uppermost, and sometimes another, they are still ebbing and flowing like the sea, waxing and waning like the moon, 1 Sam. ii. 4, &c. 2. That there is an admirable harmony and uniformity in the various occurrences of providence. "As for the wheels," though they moved several ways, yet "it was cried to them, O wheel;" they were all as one, being guided by one Spirit to one end, for God works all according to the counsel of his own will, which is one, for his own glory, which is one. And this makes the disposals of Providence truly admirable, and to be looked upon with wonder. As the works of his creation, considered separately, were "good," but altogether "very good," so the wheels of Providence, considered by themselves, are wonderful, but put them together, and they are very wonderful; "O wheel!" 3. That the motions of Providence are steady and regular, and whatever the Lord pleases that he does, and is never put upon new counsels. "The wheels turned not as they went," and the "living creatures went straight forward," ver. 22. Whatever difficulties lay in their way, they were sure to get over them, and were never obliged to stand still, turn aside, or go back. So perfectly known to God are all his works, that he is never put upon new counsels. 4. That God makes more use of the ministration of angels in the government of this lower world, than we are aware of; "The four wheels were by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub." What has been imagined by some concerning the spheres above, that every orb has its intelligence to guide it, is here intimated concerning the wheels below, that every wheel has its cherub to guide it. We think it a satisfaction to us if, under the wise God, there are wise men employed in managing the affairs of kingdoms and churches; whether there be so or no, it appears by this that there are wise angels employed, "a cherub to every wheel. 5. That all the motions of Providence, and all the ministrations of angels, are under the government of the great God. They are all "full of eyes;" those eyes of the Lord which run to and fro through the earth, and which the angels have always an eye to. The "living creatures" and "the wheels" concur in their motions and rests; for "the Spirit of life," as it may be read, or "the Spirit of the living creatures, is in the wheels." The Spirit of God directs all the creatures, both upper and lower, so as to make them serve the divine purpose. Events are not determined by the "wheel of fortune," which is blind, but by the "wheels of Providence," which are full of eyes.—Henry.

CHAP. XI.—RINGLEADERS IN APOSTACY.—Ver. 2. "These are the men that devise mischief;" under pretence of concerting measures for the public safety, they harden people in their sins, and take off their fear of God's judgments which they are threatened with by the prophets; they "give wicked counsel in this city," counseling them to restrain and silence the prophets, to rebel against the king of Babylon, and to resolve upon holding "the city" out to the last extremity. Note, It is bad with a people when the things that belong to their peace are hid from the eyes of those who are intrusted with their counsels. And when mischief is done, God knows at whose door to lay it, and, in the day of discovery and recompense, will be sure to lay it at the right door, and will say, "These are the men that devised it," though they are great men, and pass for wise men, and must not now be contradicted or controlled. They are indicted for words spoken at their council-board, which he "that stands in the congregation of the mighty" would take cognizance of; ver. 3, they said to this effect, "'It is not near;' the destruction of our city, that has been so often threatened by the prophets, 'is not near,' not so near as they talk of." They are conscious to themselves of such an enmity to reformation, that they cannot but conclude it will come at last; but they have such an opinion of God's patience, (though they have long abused it,) that they are willing to hope it will not come this great while.

DEATH OF PELATIAH.—Ver. 13. Where we may observe, 1. With what "power" Ezekiel prophesied, or, rather, what a divine power went along with it; "It came to pass, when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died;" he was mentioned ver. 1, as a principal man among the twenty-five princes that made all the mischief in Jerusalem. It should seem, this was done in vision now, as the slaying of the ancient men, chap. ix. 6, upon occasion of which Ezekiel prayed, ver. 8, as he did here; but it was an assurance that when this prophecy should be published, it should be done in fact. The death of Pelatiah was an earnest of the complete accomplishment of this prophecy. Note, God is pleased oftentimes to single out some sinners, and to make them monuments of his justice, for warning to others of what is coming; and some that thought themselves very safe, are snatched away suddenly, and drop down dead in an instant; as Ananias and Sapphira at Peter's feet when he prophesied. 2. With what "pity" Ezekiel prayed. Though the sudden death of Pelatiah was a confirmation of Ezekiel's prophecy, and really an honour to him, yet he was in deep concern about it, and laid it to heart as if he the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, [f]Get you far from the LORD; [g]unto us is this land given in possession.

16 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them [i]as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.[5]

17 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel.

18 And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof,[6] and all the abominations thereof, from thence.

19 And [m]I will give them one heart, and [n]I will put a new spirit within you; [o]and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh;

20 That [p]they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: [q]and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

21 But as for them [r]whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things and their abominations, [s]I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord GOD.

22 ¶ Then did [t]the cherubims lift up their wings, and the wheels beside them; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

23 And [x]the glory of the LORD went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city.[7]

24 ¶ Afterwards [y]the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God [z]into Chaldea, to them of the captivity: [a]so the vision that I had seen went up from me.

25 Then [b]I spake unto them of the captivity all the things that the LORD had shewed me.

4 Then shalt thou bring forth thy stuff by day[1] in their sight, as stuff for removing: and thou shalt go forth at even in their sight, as †they that go forth into captivity.

5 ‡Dig thou through the wall in their sight, and carry out thereby.

6 In their sight shalt thou bear it upon thy shoulders, and carry it forth in the twilight: thou shalt cover thy face, that thou see not the ground; [§]for I have set thee for a sign unto the house of Israel.

7 And I did so as I was commanded: I brought forth my stuff by day, as stuff for captivity, and in the even I [§]digged through the wall with mine hand; I brought it forth in the twilight, and I bare it upon my shoulder in their sight.

8 ¶ And in the morning came the word of the LORD unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, hath not the house of Israel, [k]the rebellious house, said unto thee, [l]What doest thou?

10 Say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [m]This burden concerneth the prince in Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel that are among them.

11 Say, I am your sign: like as I have done, so shall it be done unto them; they shall remove, ‖and go into captivity.

12 And [o]the prince that is among them shall bear upon his shoulder in the twilight, and shall go forth: they shall dig through the wall to carry out thereby: he shall cover his face, that he see not the ground with his eyes.

13 My [p]net also will I spread upon him,[2] and he shall be taken in my snare: [q]and I will bring him to Babylon, to the land of the Chaldeans; yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there.

14 And [r]I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him to help him, and all his bands; [s]and I will draw out the sword after them.

15 And [t]they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries.

16 But [u]I will leave *a few men of them from the sword, from the famine, and from the pestilence; [x]that they may declare all their abominations among the heathen whither they come; [y]and they shall know that I am the LORD.

17 ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

18 Son of man, [z]eat thy bread with quaking,[3] and drink thy water with trembling and with carefulness;

19 And say unto the people of the land, Thus saith the Lord GOD of the inhabitants had been his relation or friend. "He fell on his face, and cried with a loud voice," as one in earnest; "'Ah Lord God! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?' Many are swept away by the judgments we have been under; and shall the remnant which have escaped the sword, die thus by the immediate hand of heaven? Then thou wilt indeed make a full end." Perhaps it was Ezekiel's infirmity to bewail the death of this wicked prince thus, as it was Samuel's to mourn so long for Saul; but thus he showed how far he was from desiring the woful day he foretold. David lamented the sickness of those that hated and persecuted him. And we ought to be much affected with the sudden death of others, yea, though they are wicked.—Henry.

BLESSING PROMISED TO THE RESTORD CAPTIVES.—Ver. 17—20. The Lord further promised to the captives, that they, or their posterity, should be restored to their own land; and become decidedly set against idolatry and other abominable wickedness. Few, however, of them, seem at this time to have been true believers: but God engaged to prepare them for the blessings which he intended for them, by "giving them one heart, and by putting a new spirit within them." The one heart may either mean, that oneness of judgment, disposition, and affection, which the grace of God produces in his people; or that singleness of heart which distinguishes them from others. The hearts of the Jews had been divided among different idols, and they had endeavoured to worship both Jehovah and their idols, to serve him and their sins; but this change would cause them to serve him singly, wholly, and devotedly, and to renounce all idols, rivals, or worldly lusts. A new spirit would also be given them; that is, a new temper and disposition: a new light in the understanding, and direction to the judgment; a new purity in their memories, imaginations, and affections; new desires, hopes, fears, joys, and sorrows; a new tenderness in the conscience, and submission in the will; the effect of the regenerating Spirit of God; for "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit;" altogether spiritual, according to the law, truth, and image of God; disposed to repentance, faith, love, conscientious obedience and holy worship.—At the same time the Lord would take away the stony heart out of their flesh, or from their corrupt nature; for "that which is born of the flesh is flesh," carnal and enmity to God. The stony heart denotes the natural insensibility, obduracy, and obstinacy of fallen man. The carnal heart, like a stone, cannot be made to feel. Judgments, mercies, warnings, examples, are alike unavailing. The terrors from mount Sinai, the love of Christ, and the sweet promises of the gospel, fail of producing suitable affections. Men live unconcerned amidst the dead and dying; they accumulate loads of guilt like mountains, and are neither dismayed nor humbled; and they often are as unfeeling to the miseries of others, as to their own danger. They are dead, insensible, and like a stone that feels nothing from the hardest blow. But renewing grace creates a susceptibility of proper feeling in the soul and conscience; then a sinner learns to fear God, to stand in awe of his word, and to flee from his wrath. Then the mercies of God excite his gratitude, and the promises encourage his hope, he is humbled for his transgressions of the law; and unites love and gratitude with still deeper humiliation, by his knowledge of the gospel.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. ANOTHER SYMBOL—THE PROPHET'S REMOVAL OF HIS FURNITURE.—Ver. 1—7. Ezekiel seems not, for the present, to have had any more visions of the Divine glory; but to have received the revelations of the Lord's will, in the more ordinary manner of other prophets.—Even the captives, among whom he dwelt, were a rebellious house like their brethren in Judah; who would not use their senses and faculties, or avail themselves of the instructions of God's word and providence, for their advantage. After all they had heard and experienced, they still expected that Jerusalem would be preserved from the Chaldeans, they deemed themselves unhappy in bondage, and hoped to be speedily restored to their country; this led them to neglect the duties of their situation, to listen to false prophets, to reject the word of God, and thus to rebel both against his commandments and providence. To certify them therefore of the vanity of their hopes, the prophet was ordered to make ready his furniture for removing to another habitation, in the sight of the people, and then to carry it, or some part of it, to a distant place; in hopes, (speaking after the manner of men,) "that the people would consider, though they were a rebellious house." Thus he was directed to spend the day about his furniture; and in the evening to go forth as one that was afraid of being carried away captive; and to render his conduct more significant, he was to dig or break through the wall of his house, and to go forth by that opening, carrying part of his property or some provisions with him, as desirous to escape the enemy; and to cover his face, not only as in distress, but to disguise himself for fear of being detected. Having received such orders he punctually obeyed them; and thus set before the eyes of the captive Jews the plundering of Jerusalem of all its treasures, and the removal of them and of the inhabitants to Babylon; the vain endeavour of the Jews to escape, and to carry off their property; and especially the conduct and fate of king Zedekiah.

EXPLANATION OF THE SYMBOL.—Ver. 8—16. Either the people had ridiculed the prophet's conduct, or they had contemptuously disregarded it. He was therefore commanded to inform them, that this burden or prophetic sign of impending judgments, respected Zedekiah the prince in Jerusalem, under whose shadow they hoped to live among the nations; as well as all those of the families of Irsael, who yet remained in their own land. As Ezekiel had removed his furniture, and changed his habitation; so of Jerusalem, and of the land of Israel, They shall eat their bread [a]with carefulness, and drink their water with astonishment, that her land may be desolate from [†]all that is therein, [c]because of the violence of all them that dwell therein.

20 And the cities that are inhabited shall be laid waste, and the land shall be desolate; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

21 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

22 Son of man, what is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, [f]The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth?[4]

23 Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [g]I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision.

24 For there shall be no more any vain vision[5] nor flattering divination within the house of Israel.

25 For I am the LORD: [k]I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged: for [l]in your days, [m]O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord GOD.

26 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

27 Son of man, behold, they of the house of Israel say, The vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off.

28 Therefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [o]There shall none of my words be prolonged any more; but the word which I have spoken shall be done, saith the Lord GOD.

Lying prophets reproved, and their daubing with untempered mortar, 1. False prophetesses also reproved with their impostures, 17.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [a]prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say thou unto them that *prophesy out of their own hearts, Hear ye the word of the LORD;

3 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [c]Woe unto the foolish prophets, that [†]follow their own spirit, and [‡]have seen nothing![1]

4 O Israel, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deserts.

5 Ye have not gone up into the *gaps, neither [†]made up the hedge for the house of Israel [g]to stand in the battle in the day of the LORD.

6 They [l]have seen vanity and [k]lying divination, [l]saying, The LORD saith; and the LORD hath not sent them: and they have [m]made others to hope that they would confirm the word.

7 Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say, [n]The LORD saith it; albeit I have not spoken?

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, [o]behold, I am against you, saith the Lord GOD.

9 And [p]mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lies: they shall not be in the [‡]assembly of my people, [q]neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel, [r]neither shall they enter into the land of Israel; [s]and ye shall know that I am the Lord GOD.

10 Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying, [u]Peace; and there was no peace; and one built up [§]a wall, and, lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar:[2]

11 Say unto them which daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall: there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye, O great hailstones, shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it.

12 Lo, when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it?

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury;[3] and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury, to consume it.

14 So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall, and [d]ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof; [e]and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

15 Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered mortar; and will say unto you, [f]The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it;

16 To wit, the prophets of Israel, which prophesy concerning Jerusalem, and which [g]see visions of peace for her, [h]and there is no peace, saith the Lord GOD.

17 ¶ Likewise, thou son of man, [i]set thy face against [k]the daughters of thy people, which [l]prophesy [m]out of their own heart; and prophesy thou against them,

18 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [n]Woe to the women that [o]sew pillows to all *arm-holes,[4] and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature,[5] to [p]hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls of my people, and will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?

would their property and persons be removed into another land, and the king himself would flee from the conquerors in the dusk of the evening, with a burden on his shoulder and a covering on his face, in order to disguise himself; whilst his attendants would break through the wall to forward his escape. But the Lord would spread his net for him, and take him in his snare; for the Chaldeans would overtake him, and carry him to Babylon; yet he should not see that city, though he should die there. Jeremiah had predicted, that his eyes should see the eyes of the king of Babylon, Jer. xxxiv. 3; and here Ezekiel foretold, that he should not see Babylon, and Josephus says that he thought these two prophecies inconsistent with each other, and therefore believed neither of them; but both were exactly accomplished, when he was brought to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, and there had his eyes put out, and was carried to Babylon. The Lord, moreover, declared, that all the Jews who adhered to Zedekiah and survived the taking of the city, should be scattered through the nations, and be pursued by his judgments; and by the accomplishment of these predictions, they should be convinced that he was the eternal JEHOVAH, the Creator and Lord of all. Yet he would leave a remnant of them, that should escape all the divers kinds of death, which cut off the rest; and who might declare among the heathen all their abominations.—Scott.

DELUSIVE PROVERB.—Ver. 22. The people said, "'The days are prolonged,' the judgments are not come when they were expected to come, but seem to be still put off de die in diem—from day to day, and therefore we may conclude, that 'every vision fails,' because it should seem that some do; that, because the destruction is not come yet, it will never come; we will never trust a prophet again, for we have been worse frighted than hurt." And another saying they had, which, if it would not conquer their convictions, yet would cool their affections, and abate their concern, and that was, "'The vision' is 'for a great while 'to come,' it refers to events at a vast distance, 'and he prophesies of' things, which, though they may be true, are yet very 'far off,' so that we need not to trouble our heads about them, ver. 27, we may die in honour and peace before these troubles come." And if indeed the troubles had been thus adjourned, they might have made themselves easy, as Hezekiah did, "Is it not well, if peace and truth shall be in my days?" But it was a great mistake, and they did but deceive themselves into their own ruin; and God is here much displeased at it, for, 1. It was wretched abuse of the patience of God, who, because for a time he kept silence, was thought to be "altogether such a one as themselves," Ps. l. 21. That "forbearance of God," which should have "led them to repentance," hardened them in sin. They were willing to think their works were not "evil, because sentence against" them was "not executed speedily;" and therefore concluded the "vision" itself "failed," because "the days were prolonged." 2. It received countenance from the false prophets that were among them, as should seem from the notice God takes, ver. 24, of the "vain visions," and "flattering divinations," even "within the house of Israel," to whom "were committed the oracles of God."—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. FALSE PROPHETS.—Ver. 1—4. The Lord had before intimated his displeasure against the false prophets, chap. xii. 24: but Ezekiel was here ordered more fully and directly to enter his protest against them, as the other prophets had done.—"The true prophets often denounce God's judgments against the false ones; laying to their charge many misdemeanours in their private conversation; and upbraiding them for unfaithfulness in the office they undertook, of guiding and directing men's consciences." [Lowth.] Some of the false prophets lived in Judah, and others of them among the captives in Chaldea. They vaunted themselves to be, and were considered by many as, the prophets of Israel; but they were the ruin of the people who confided in them. Ezekiel was, therefore, required to prophesy against them, not so much in expectation of bringing them to repentance, as in order to undeceive those whom they deluded. They had the character of being very discerning men, and were, no doubt, proud of their wisdom: but they were "foolish" prophets; because they followed their own fancies, and had received no revelations from God, though they audaciously ventured to speak in his name. Israel, therefore, must be informed, that their favourite prophets were like foxes in the deserts; that is, crafty, ravenous, and mischievous; always scheming something for their own interest, or shifting about to save themselves, without regard to the welfare of the people; thus they spoiled the Lord's vineyard, and devoured his flock; as the foxes from the desert marred the vineyards, and did mischief in the sheepfolds of Canaan.

FALSE SECURITY.—Ver. 10—16. The peculiar guilt of these prophets consisted in their seducing the worshippers of God into idolatry and iniquity, and encouraging them to harden themselves in impenitence, by assuring them of peace and prosperity, at the very time when divine judgments were about to be poured out upon them. In this manner, perhaps, some one of them courted the favour of the people: and the rest finding him caressed and followed, supporting his false predictions by their confident assertions and vain reasonings. Thus they acted, as if a man were to build a wall with loose stones or bricks of earth, without cement; and others should labour to give it an appearance of stability, by daubing it over with mortar made of bad materials, and not properly mixed or tempered: and they should then expect that such a wall would protect them, or that a house built of such walls would serve for a secure habitation. The people supposed themselves safe from the assaults of the Chaldeans; because they vainly presumed, that, as the people of God, he was engaged by covenant to preserve them; not considering that

2 And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, [d]these men have set up their idols in their heart, [e]and put the stumbling-block of their iniquity before their face: [f]should I be enquired of at all by them?

4 Therefore speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet, [h]I the LORD will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his idols;

5 That [l]I may take the house of Israel in their own heart,[1] because they are all [k]estranged from me through their idols.

6 ¶ Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [l]Repent, and turn yourselves* from your idols; and [m]turn away your faces from all your abominations.

10 And [a]they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity: the punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him:

11 That the house of Israel may go no more astray from me, [d]neither be polluted any more with all their transgressions; but [e]that they may be my people, and I may be their God, saith the Lord GOD.

12 ¶ The word of the LORD came again to me, saying,

13 Son of man, [f]when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously, then will I stretch out mine hand upon it, and will break the staff of the bread thereof, and will send famine upon it, [h]and will cut off man and beast from it:

18 Though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters, but they only shall be delivered themselves.

19 ¶ Or if I send a pestilence into that land, [x]and pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beast:

20 Though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they shall but deliver their own souls by their righteousness.

21 For thus saith the Lord GOD, §How much more[5] when I send [a]my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beast, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast?

22 ¶ Yet, [b]behold, therein shall be left a remnant that shall be brought forth, both sons they had forfeited the blessing by their crimes: and the prophets laboured to varnish over these presumptuous expectations by a variety of specious pretences. But the Lord by his prophet assured them, that this worthless wall should certainly fall down, notwithstanding all their daubing. A tremendous shower of rain and hail would wash away all the untempered mortar, and then the stormy wind would rend the wall itself. This storm, arising from his righteous indignation, would level the wall to the ground and destroy its foundations, and consume those who builded it or sheltered themselves under it, in its own destruction. That is, the Lord would send the Chaldeans to besiege and destroy Jerusalem, and desolate Judah; they would come with such force and fury, as the Jews could by no means withstand; and their success would confute the lying predictions of the prophets, and subvert the false hopes of the people. When these events should take place, the false prophets would be reproached and taunted with their folly and presumption; till the Lord had accomplished his wrath upon them: and then they who trusted them, would be reminded by God and his prophets, that "the wall was no more, neither they who daubed it."—The latter part of the eleventh verse may be rendered thus:—"I will rend great hailstones; they shall fall; and the storm of a whirlwind shall rend it."

SEDUCTRESSES.—Ver. 17—23. As the Lord endued some women with the spirit of prophecy; so there were others, who pretended to it from secular motives. But the prophet was ordered to set his face against them too, and to charge them with prophesying out of their own hearts. As a token of the peace and security which they promised, they sewed pillows to their own armholes, or elbows, ver. 20, and to their's who consulted them; intimating that they might indulge and repose themselves in security, for no enemy would disturb them.—The meaning of the kerchiefs, or coverings, which they put "upon the head of every stature," (or of persons of every age indiscriminately,) is not so evident: some think that they were ornaments, with which they decorated those who consulted them, in token of victory and triumph; others suppose, that this was spoken figuratively, for their hoodwinking them, or keeping them in the dark by their delusions: but probably it was some superstitious observance, a kind of amulet or charm, that they employed to entice the people into their snares. For they thus hated their souls; and, as it seems probable, not only promised the nation deliverance from the Chaldeans; but professed to protect by some spell or charm the lives of those who applied to them; nay, even to save their souls, by some absolution or indulgence which they vended. —Scott.

CHAP. XIV. WARNING AGAINST IDOLATRY.—Ver. 1—5. It is uncertain whether these elders of Israel were the leading persons among the captives; or, as some conjecture, certain elders from Jerusalem, who had come to Babylon about business, and who took that opportunity of seeing and hearing the prophet. They came, however, and sat before him to hear his word, and to make inquiries concerning the affairs of the nation. Probably they appeared very grave and devout, and gave great attention to his discourse; and perhaps he was ready to show them respect and favour. But the Lord saw through their disguises, and revealed their true character. Notwithstanding fair appearances, their hearts were set upon their abominable and filthy idols: they preferred the service of them to the holy worship of God; so that these were the stumbling-blocks, over which they fell into all kinds of iniquity; and yet instead of casting them behind their backs, they set them up before their faces, determined to cleave to them at all events.—"They are not only idolaters in their hearts; but they have actually set up idols and worshipped them." [Lowth.] Could it then consist with the glory of God to give a favourable answer to the inquiries of such hypocrites? On the contrary, the prophet was instructed plainly to inform them, that the Lord had determined to answer all Israelites, without respect of rank or station, who came with idolatrous hearts to inquire of him, according to the multitude of their idols; either denouncing vengeance upon them proportioned to their aggravated crimes, or giving them up to be deluded to their ruin. Thus he would ensnare them in their own counsels, leave them to manifest the concealed wickedness of their hearts, show the world their abominable dispositions, and render them contemptible and miserable: seeing they were all totally alienated from him, through an infatuated attachment to idolatry.—"That I may deal with them according to their deserts, and thereby convince them, that I am a searcher of hearts, and know the secret wickedness of their thoughts." [Lowth.]—"He shall be led with lies, according as he delighted therein."—Scott.

THREATENED JUDGMENTS.—Ver. 13. "Four sore judgments" are here specified: 1. "Famine." The denying and withholding of common mercies is itself judgment enough, there needs no more to make a people miserable. God needs not bring the staff of oppression, it is but "breaking the staff of bread," and the work is soon done; he "cuts off man and beast," by cutting off the provisions which nature makes for both in the annual products of the earth. God "breaks the staff of bread," when, though we have bread, yet we are not nourished and strengthened by it; Hag. i. 6, "Ye eat, but ye have not enough." 2. Hurtful "beasts, noisome" and noxious, either as poisonous, or as ravenous; God can make these "to pass through the land," to increase in all parts of it, and to bereave it, not only of the tame cattle, preying upon their flocks and herds, but of their people, devouring men, women, and children, so "that no man may pass through because and daughters; behold, they shall come forth unto you, and [c]ye shall see their way and their doings: [4] and [d]ye shall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, even concerning all that I have brought upon it.

23 And they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings: and ye shall know [e]that I have not done without cause all that I have done in it, saith the Lord GOD.

By a wretched infant is shewed the original state of Jerusalem, 1: God's love to her, 6: she is threatened with severe judgments, 35.

AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [a]cause Jerusalem to know her [b]abominations,

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD unto Jerusalem, [c]Thy *birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an [d]Amorite, and thy mother an [e]Hittite.

4 And as [f]for thy nativity, in the day thou wast born thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water †to supple thee: thou wast not salted at all,[1] [g]nor swaddled at all.

5 None [h]eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; but thou wast cast out in the open field, to the loathing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born.

6 ¶ And when I passed by thee, and saw thee ‡polluted in thine own blood, I said unto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, [i]Live; yea, I said unto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, Live.

7 I have §caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou hast increased and waxen great, and thou art come to ‖excellent ornaments: thy breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown, [m]whereas thou wast naked and bare.

8 Now when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was the time of love;[2] and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness: yea, [p]I sware unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord GOD, and thou becamest mine.

9 Then washed I thee with water; yea, I throughly washed away thy *blood from thee; and I anointed thee with oil.

10 I [s]clothed thee also with [t]broidered work, and shod thee with badgers' skin, and [x]I girded thee about with fine linen, and I [y]covered thee with silk.

11 I decked thee also with ornaments, and [z]I put bracelets upon thy hands, and [a]a chain on thy neck.

12 And I put a jewel on thy †forehead, and ear-rings in thine ears, [c]and a beautiful crown upon thine head.

13 Thus wast thou decked with gold and silver; and thy raiment was of fine linen, and silk, and broidered work; [d]thou didst eat fine flour,[3] and honey, and oil; [e]and thou wast exceeding beautiful, [f]and thou didst prosper into a kingdom.

14 And [g]thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty: for it was perfect [h]through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord GOD.

15 ¶ But thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot[4] because of thy renown, [i]and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by: his it was.

16 And [m]of thy garments thou didst take, and deckedst thy high places with divers colours, and playedst the harlot thereupon: the like things shall not come, neither shall it be so.

17 Thou [n]hast also taken thy fair jewels of my gold and of my silver, which I had given thee, and madest to thyself images of [i]men, [o]and didst commit whoredom with them;

18 And [p]tookest thy broidered garments, and coveredst them; and thou hast set mine oil and mine incense before them.

of the beasts;" none dare travel even in the high roads, for fear of being pulled in pieces by lions or other beasts of prey, as the children of Beth-el by two bears. Note, When men revolt from their allegiance to God, and rebel against him, it is just with God that the inferior creatures should rise up in arms against man, Lev. xxvi. 22. 3. "War:" God often chastises sinful nations by bringing a sword upon them, the sword of a foreign enemy, and he gives it its commission, and orders what execution it shall do, ver. 17, he says, "Sword, go through the land." It is bad enough if the sword do but enter into the borders of a land, but much worse when it "goes through" the bowels of a land. By it God "cuts off man and beast," horse and foot; what execution the sword does, God does by it; for it is his sword, and it acts as he directs. 4. "Pestilence;" a dreadful disease, which has sometimes depopulated cities; by it God "pours out his fury in blood;" that is, in death; the pestilence kills as effectually as if the blood were shed by the sword; for it is poisoned by the disease; "the sickness" we call it. See how miserable the case of mankind is, that lies thus exposed to deaths in various shapes! See how dangerous the case of sinners is, against whom God has so many ways of fighting!—Henry.

NOAH, DANIEL, AND JOB.—Ver. 13—21. The faith, obedience, and prayers of Noah prevailed to the saving of his house; though not of the old world: and he was assured that the earth should not be deluged a second time. Job's sacrifice and intercession in behalf of his friends was accepted: and Daniel had prevailed with God for the discovery of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, by which his companions and the wise men of Babylon were preserved from death. Yet if these three eminent saints of different ages, had all lived at once, and united in intercession for a land which was ripe for judgment, they would not have prevailed. But their righteousness would either have exempted them from temporal calamities, or converted them into blessings. Not that it could be the ground of their acceptance; but their righteous conduct would evince them to be justified persons and partakers of God's grace and favour; and thus ensure his protection and their everlasting salvation, according to the tenour of the new covenant. There is abundant encouragement, during the time of the Lord's patience and mercy, to use means for the conversion of children, relatives, and neighbours; yet, when that time expires and the days of vengeance arrive, no intercession can prevail for the impenitent; nor can any righteous man deliver his nearest relations from destruction.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. EMBLEM OF THE VINE-WOOD.—The church and nation of Israel had often been compared to a vine. Now a vine is most valuable, if it be fruitful; otherwise it is almost as unsightly and worthless as a bramble: other fruit-trees may be of some use for timber; but the vine is of no value except for its fruit. "What is the vine tree more than another tree, or even than a branch of the trees of the forest?" Wood could not be taken from it for any work; not even for a pin or peg, to hang a vessel on. Only some part of other trees are used for fuel: but the ends and the middle, the whole of the vine when cut down, as well as the prunings of it from year to year, are consigned to the fire, and nobody attempts to reserve any part of it for other uses. And if it be useless, before it be cast into the fire, what can it be good for when almost consumed? The nation of Israel, of which the inhabitants of Jerusalem were the chief, was, in respect of other nations, as the vine in respect of the trees of the forest. Other nations were renowned for arts and arms, and became eminent and formidable, and the Lord used them in his providence as he saw good; but Israel was "his vine," from which he looked for the fruits of spiritual worship and holy obedience. They, however, proved unfruitful, or brought forth poisonous berries like the wild vine. He would, therefore, at present make no use of them, except as fuel to the fire of his indignation, that his justice might be glorified in their punishment. By the ruin of the ten tribes, and the preceding judgments executed upon Judah, both ends of the vine were already burned, and the Lord meant not to preserve the middle.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. PROLONGED ALLEGORY—THE INFANT'S ANCESTRY, BIRTH, AND EXPOSURE.—Ver. 3—5. The subsequent allegory or parable immediately related to the nation of Israel; but as that was the visible church of God, and a type of his true people, it has generally been accommodated to the case of individual believers: yet, unless this be done with great caution, we shall draw very wrong conclusions from it. For every one must perceive the absurdity of supposing, that true believers, after conversion, actually run into all the enormous wickedness here described, so as to exceed in every abomination the worst enemies of religion.—The prophet was commanded to remind Jerusalem of her base and mean original. It is evident that the allegory at first relates to the whole nation of Israel; though afterwards a distinction is made between Jerusalem and Samaria.—Jerusalem, though afterwards the holy city, was originally built by the Canaanites, and generally inhabited by the Jebusites, (who were descended from Canaan,) Gen. x. 15, 16, till David took it. Yet Jerusalem's birth and nativity of the land of Canaan refers rather to the inhabitants than to the city itself. Abraham and Sarah, the ancestors of Israel, had originally been idolaters, as the Hittites and Amorites were: and their posterity, when they had expelled these nations, and possessed their land, seemed to be their descendants, as resembling them in character and conduct.—"Thou bonstest to be the seed of Abraham: but thou art degenerate, and followest the abominations of the wicked Canaanites, as children do the manners of their fathers."—The 19 My [q]meat also which I gave thee, fine flour, and oil, and honey, wherewith I fed thee, thou hast even set it before them for [§]a sweet savour: and thus it was, saith the Lord GOD.

20 Moreover, thou hast taken [r]thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast born unto me, [s]and these hast thou sacrificed unto them to [‖]be devoured. [t]Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter, 21 That thou hast slain my children, and delivered them to cause them [u]to pass through the fire for them?

22 And in all thine abominations and thy whoredoms [x]thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, when thou wast naked and bare, and wast polluted in thy blood.

23 And it came to pass, after all thy wickedness, [y](woe, woe unto thee! saith the Lord GOD,)

24 That [z]thou hast also built unto thee an [*]eminent place, [a]and hast made thee an high place in every street.

25 Thou hast built thy high place [b]at every head of the way, [c]and hast made thy beauty to be abhorred, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms.

26 Thou hast also committed fornication [d]with the Egyptians thy neighbours,[5] great of flesh; and hast increased thy whoredoms, to provoke me to anger.

27 Behold, therefore [e]I have stretched out my hand over thee, [f]and have diminished thine ordinary food,[6] [g]and delivered thee unto the will of them that hate thee, [h]the [†]daughters of the Philistines, [i]which are ashamed of thy lewd way.

28 Thou [k]hast played the whore also with the Assyrians, because thou wast unsatiable; yea, thou hast played the harlot with them, and yet couldest not be satisfied.

29 Thou hast moreover multiplied thy fornication [l]in the land of Canaan unto Chaldea; and yet thou wast not satisfied herewith.

30 How [m]weak is thine heart,[7] saith the Lord GOD, seeing thou doest all these things, [n]the work of an imperious whorish woman;

31 [‡]In that thou buildest [o]thine eminent place in the head of every way, and [p]makest thine high place in every street; and hast not been as an harlot, [q]in that thou scornest hire;

32 But as [r]a wife that committeth adultery, which taketh strangers instead of her husband!

33 They [s]give gifts to all whores; [t]but thou givest thy gifts to all thy lovers, and [§]hirest them that they may come unto thee on every side for thy whoredom.

34 And the contrary is in thee from other women in thy whoredoms, whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms: and in that thou givest a reward, and no reward is given unto thee, therefore thou art contrary.

35 ¶ Wherefore, [u]O harlot, hear the word of the LORD:

36 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [y]Because thy filthiness was poured out, [z]and thy nakedness discovered, through thy whoredoms with thy lovers, and with all the idols of thine abominations, [a]and by the blood of thy children, which thou didst give unto them;

37 Behold, therefore I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou hast taken pleasure, and all them that thou hast loved, with all them that thou hast hated:[8] I will even gather them round about against thee, and will discover thy nakedness unto them, that they may see all thy nakedness.

38 And I will judge thee, [‖]as women that break wedlock and [c]shed blood are judged; and I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy.

39 And I will also give thee into their hand, and [d]they shall throw down thine eminent place, and shall break down thy high places: they shall strip thee also of thy clothes, and shall take [*]thy fair jewels, and leave thee naked and bare.

40 They shall also bring up a company against thee, and they shall stone thee with stones,[9] and thrust thee through with their swords.

41 And they shall [h]burn thine houses with fire, [i]and execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women: [k]and I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more.

42 So [l]will I make my fury toward thee to rest, and my jealousy shall depart from thee, and I will be quiet, [m]and will be no more angry.

43 Because thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast fretted me in all these things; behold, therefore, [p]I also will recompense thy way upon thine head, saith the Lord GOD: and thou shalt not commit this lewdness above all thine abominations.

44 ¶ Behold, [q]every one that useth proverbs shall use this proverb against thee, saying, [r]As is the mother, so is her daughter.

45 Thou art thy mother's daughter,[10] [*]that loatheth her husband and her children; and thou art the sister of thy sisters, which loathed their husbands and their children: [‡]your mother was an Hittite, and your father an Amorite.

nativity of Israel, as a distinct people, may be dated from the time when the family of Jacob was multiplied into a nation. But at this period, they were reduced to abject slavery, and cruelly oppressed; they drudged in the brick-kilns, and were covered with the clay; their male children were ordered to be slain or exposed; they were apparently deserted of God, and in general forgetful of him, and polluted with the idolatries, superstitions, and vices of their oppressors. Thus the new-born nation, (so to speak,) was like an infant that was cruelly cast out and exposed, (according to the barbarous custom of ancient times;) that had none to wash, cleanse, clothe, or do any thing for it; but was left, as unpitied and loathed, to perish on the day on which it was born.—This was an apt representation of the wretched and perilous condition of Israel in Egypt, and it is also a striking emblem of our original state of sin and misery.

THE FOUNDLING NURTURED AND ESPOUSED.—Ver. 6—8. Whilst this perishing infant lay defiled and trampled on in its blood, a loathsome as well as a miserable object; the Lord passed by, beheld it with compassion, and said to it, "Live." Nothing in the character of Israel deserved his favour or attracted his esteem; but every thing was suited to excite his abhorrence and to merit his indignation; yet from mere compassion and good-will he preserved the nation. He spake with power: and by his word he restrained the rage of their Egyptian oppressors, and at length redeemed Israel from bondage. By his blessing they had multiplied exceedingly in Egypt: at length they were brought forth with an outstretched arm, and formed into a powerful nation under rulers and princes of their own. The Lord also adorned them, by giving them his righteous laws and statutes; and setting up his tabernacle, and manifesting his power and presence among them, by the ark of the covenant, the pillar of fire and cloud, the solemnities of mount Sinai, and the miracles which he wrought for them. Thus the outcast infant grew up to be a marriageable woman, of comely form and excellently decorated: that is, Israel was prepared to be admitted into covenant with God, and espoused to him to bring up children to him: this he had in view from the first: when he passed by, and saw the perishing outcast, it was "a time of love;" he intended first to be a father, and then a husband unto her: so that "he spread his skirt over her," and espoused her to himself, covering the shame of her former destitute condition, taking her under his immediate protection, and ennobling her by this high and honourable relation. This covenant was confirmed with an oath, or engagement to fidelity, and thus Israel became the Lord's peculiar people.—Scott.

THE WIFE'S TREACHERY—SPIRITUAL UNFAITHFULNESS.—Ver. 15—28. Idolatry is here all along represented (as often elsewhere) under the similitude of whoredom and adultery. 1. Because it is the violation of a marriage-covenant with God, forsaking him, and embracing the bosom of a stranger; it is giving that affection and that service to his rivals, which are due to him alone. 2. Because it is the corrupting and defiling of the mind, and the enslaving of the spiritual part of the man, and subjecting it to the power and dominion of sense, as whoredom is. 3. Because it debauches the conscience, sears and hardens it; and those who by their idolatries dishonour the divine nature, and change the truth of God into a lie, and his glory into shame, God justly punishes by giving them over to a reprobate mind, to dishonour the human nature with vile affections, Rom. i. 23, &c. It is a besotting, bewitching sin; and when men are given up to it, they seldom recover themselves out of the snare. 4. Because it is a shameful, scandalous sin, for those that have joined themselves to the Lord, to join themselves to an idol. Now observe here, What were the causes of this sin; how came the people of God to be drawn away to the service of idols? How came a virgin so well taught, so well educated, to be debauched? Who would have thought it? But (1.) They grew proud; ver. 15, "'Thou trustedst to thy beauty,' and didst expect that that should make thee an interest, and didst 'play the harlot because of thy renown.'" They thought, because they were so complimented and admired by their neighbours, that, further to ingratiate themselves with them, and return their compliments, they must join with them in their worship, and conform themselves to their usages. Solomon admitted idolatry to gratify his wives and their relations. Note, Abundance of young people are ruined by pride, and particularly pride in their beauty. Rara est concordia formæ atque pudicitiæ—Beauty and chastity are seldom associated. (2.) They forget their beginning; ver. 22, "'Thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth,' how poor and mean and despicable thou wast, and what great things God did for thee, and what lasting obligations he laid upon thee thereby." Note, It would be an effectual check to our pride and sensuality, to consider what we are, and how much we are beholden to the free grace of God. 3. They were weak in understanding and in resolution; ver. 30, "How weak is thy heart, seeing thou dost all these things." Note, The strength of men's lusts is an evidence of the weakness of their hearts; they have no acquaintance with themselves, nor government of themselves. She is weak, and yet an imperious, whorish woman. Note, Those that are most foolish are commonly most imperious, and think themselves fit to manage others when they are far from being able to manage themselves.—Henry.

SENTENCE AGAINST THE ADULTERESS.—Ver. 35—43. The adulteress having been arraigned, and her guilt undeniably proved, the Judge proceeded to denounce sentence. For the enormous idolatries, cruelty, and persecution of Jerusalem and Judah, the Lord had determined to gather the surrounding nations, (both those with whom they had 47 Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations; but, [‡]as if that were a very little thing, thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways.

48 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, [a]Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters.

49 Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, [c]fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness[12] was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

50 And they were haughty, [e]and committed abomination before me: [f]therefore I took them away as I saw good.

51 Neither hath [g]Samaria committed half of thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hast justified thy sisters[13] in all thine abominations which thou hast done.

52 Thou also, which hast judged thy sisters, bear thine own shame, for thy sins that thou hast committed more abominable than they: [i]they are more righteous than thou; yea, be thou confounded also, and bear thy shame, in that thou hast justified thy sisters.

53 When I shall [m]bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them;

54 That thou mayest bear thine own shame, and mayest be confounded in all that thou hast done, in that thou art a comfort unto them.

55 When thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate.

CHAP. XVII.

By two eagles and a vine, 1, is shewed God's judgment upon Zedekiah for his revolting from Babylon to Egypt, 11. A promise of Christ's kingdom, 22.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [a]put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel;

3 And say, thus saith the Lord GOD, [b]A great eagle with great wings, long-winged, full of feathers, which had *divers colours, [d]came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar:[1]

4 He cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffick; he set it in a city of merchants.

5 He took also of the seed of the land, and [†]planted it in a fruitful field; [e]he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow-tree:

6 And it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs.

7 There was also another great eagle[2] with great wings and many feathers; and, behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation.

8 It was planted in a good [‡]soil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine.

9 Say thou, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [k]Shall it prosper? shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring, [m]even without great power, or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof.

10 Yea, behold, being planted, shall it prosper? [n]shall it not utterly wither when the east wind[3] toucheth it? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew.

11 ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, formed alliances, as the Egyptians and Assyrians; and such as had always been inimical to it, as Edom, Ammon, Moab, and Philistia,) to inflict or to witness his judgments upon them. Before then he resolved to expose the crimes of the Jews, to strip them of all their privileges, and to put them to shame and contempt: as if a woman should be stripped naked, and publicly exposed, a punishment in some places inflicted on profligate women. Thus would he condemn them as women used to be condemned for adultery, and for murdering their children: and he would execute the sentence with jealous indignation. He would give Jerusalem into the hand of the Chaldeans, who would throw down the city and temple which the Jews had polluted by idolatry; who would level their cities and high places with the ground; and who would slay, plunder, and enslave the people; and drive the remnant of them as naked captives before them. Thus they would serve Jerusalem, as men used to deal with adulteresses, whom they stoned, slew with the sword, or otherwise put to death: they would burn all her palaces and edifices with fire, and make her an example to other cities and nations; as the death of an adulteress warned other women not to copy her crimes. Then would the fury of the Lord rest on Jerusalem; in this manner he would terminate her idolatries, and disable the Jews from building or endowing any more idol-temples: so should his justice be satisfied, and his jealousy subside: and having executed his purposes of vengeance, he would be quiet, and cease from his indignation.—This intimates, that after the destruction of Jerusalem, the Lord would yet have mercy on the remnant of the nation.—He would, however, certainly execute this vengeance upon them, for their ingratitude, because they had grieved and provoked their benefactor by their crimes, and in order to destroy idolatry from among them.—Scott.

JERUSALEM LIKE SODOM.—Ver. 49. "This was the iniquity of Sodom," (it is implied, and this is thine iniquity too,) "pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness;" their "going after strange flesh," which was Sodom's most flagrant wickedness, is not mentioned, because notoriously known; but those sins which did not look so black, but opened the door and led the way to these more enormous crimes, and began to fill that measure of her sins, which was filled up at length by their unnatural filthiness. Now these initiating sins were, 1. Pride, in which the heart lifts up itself above and against both God and man; pride was the first sin that turned angels into devils, and the "garden of the Lord" into a "hell upon earth." It was the pride of the Sodomites that they despised "righteous Lot," and would not bear to be reproved by him; and this ripened them for ruin. 2. Gluttony, here called "fulness of bread." It was God's great mercy that they had plenty, but their great sin that they abused it, glutted themselves with it, ate to excess, and drank to excess, and made that the gratification of their lusts which was given them to be the support of their lives. 3. Idleness, "abundance of idleness," a dread of labour, and a love of ease. Their country was fruitful, and the abundance they had they came easily by, which was a temptation to them to indulge themselves in sloth, which disposed them to all that abominable filthiness which kindled their flames. Note, Idleness is an inlet to much sin; the men of Sodom, who were idle, were wicked, and "sinners before the Lord exceedingly," Gen. xiii. 13. The standing waters gather filth, and the sitting bird is the fowler's mark. When David "rose from off his bed at evening," he saw Bathsheba. Quæritur, Ægisthus quare sit factus adulter? In promptu causa est; desidiosus erat—What made Ægisthus an adulterer? Indolence, 4. Oppression; neither did she "strengthen the hands of the poor and needy;" probably, it is implied that she weakened their hands, and broke their arms; however, it was bad enough that, when she had so much wealth, and, consequently, power, and interest, and leisure, she did nothing for the relief of the poor, in providing for whose wants those that themselves are "full of bread" may employ their time well, they need not be so abundantly idle, as too often they are. These were the sins of the Sodomites, and these were Jerusalem's sins; their pride, the cause of their sins, is mentioned again, ver. 50, "they were haughty;" with the horrid effects of their sins, their "abombinations" which they "committed before God." Men arrive gradually at the height of impiety and wickedness; Nemo repentè fit turpissimus—No man reaches the height of vice at once. But where pride has got the ascendant in a man, he is in the high road to all abominations. The sins of Jerusalem exceeded those of Sodom and Samaria: they were more heinous in the sight of God, either in themselves, or by reason of several aggravations: "'Thou hast not only walked after their ways,' and trod in their steps, but hast quite outdone them in wickedness, ver. 47. Thou thoughtest it 'a very little thing' to do as they did; didst laugh at them as sneaking sinners, and silly ones; thou wouldst be more cunning, more daring, in wickedness; wouldst triumph more boldly over their convictions, and bid more open defiance to God and religion."—Henry.

CHAP. XVII. THE EAGLE AND THE VINE.—Ver. 1—10. Zedekiah knew not when he was well off, but grew impatient of the disgrace of being a tributary to the king of Babylon, and, to get clear of it, entered into a private league with the king of Egypt. He had no reason to complain that the king of Babylon put any new hardships upon him, or improved his advantages against him, that he oppressed or impoverished his country, for, as the prophet had said before, ver. 6, to aggravate his treachery, he shows again, ver. 8, what a fair way he was in to be considerable; "he was planted in a good soil by great waters," his family was likely enough to be built up, and his exchequer to

THE word of the LORD came unto me again, saying,

2 What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?

3 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel.

4 Behold, [s]all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: [t]the soul that sinneth, it shall die.

5 ¶ But [u]if a man be just, and do [1]that which is lawful and right, the high cedar," the farthest of all from the root: for, soon after he appeared, the "house of David" was all cut off and extinguished, but the nearest of all to heaven, for his kingdom was not of this world. He was "taken from the top of the young twigs," for he is "the Man, the Branch, a tender" Plant, and a "Root out of a dry ground." This branch is planted "in a high mountain," ver. 22, in the "mountain of the height of Israel," ver. 23; thither he brought Zerubbabel in triumph, there he raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to gather the "lost sheep of the house of Israel" that were "scattered upon the mountains," set him "his King" upon "his holy hill of Zion," sent forth the gospel from "mount Zion," the word of the Lord from Jerusalem; there in the "height of Israel," a nation which all its neighbours had an eye upon as conspicuous and illustrious, was the Christian church first planted; the churches of Judea were the most primitive churches. The unbelieving Jews did what they could to prevent its being planted there; but who can pluck up what God will plant? From thence it spreads far and wide. The Jewish state, though it began very low in Zerubbabel's time, was set as a tender branch, which might easily be plucked up, yet took root, spread strangely, and after some time became very considerable; those of other nations, "fowl of every wing," put themselves under the protection of it. The Christian church was at first like a grain of mustard-seed, but became, like this tender branch here, a great tree; its beginning small, but its latter end increasing to admiration.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. THE PROVERB.—Ver. 2. "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge;" that is, we are punished for the sins of our ancestors, which is as great an absurdity in the divine regimen, as if the children should have their teeth "set on edge," or stupified, by the "fathers' eating sour grapes," whereas, in the order of natural causes, if men eat or drink any thing amiss, they only themselves shall suffer by it. Now, 1. It must be owned that there was some occasion given for this proverb. God had often said that he would "visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children," especially the sin of idolatry, intending thereby to express the evils of sin, or of that sin, his detestation of it, and just indignation against it, and the heavy punishments he would bring upon idolaters, and that parents might be restrained from sin by their affection to their children, and that children might not be drawn to sin by their reverence for their parents. He had likewise often declared by his prophets, that in bringing the present ruin upon Judah and Jerusalem, he had an eye to the sins of Manasseh and other preceding kings; for looking upon the nation as a body politic and punishing them with national judgments for national sins, and admitting the maxim of the law, that a "corporation never dies," reckoning with them now for the iniquities of for-idols of the house of Israel, hath not defiled his neighbour's wife,

16 Neither hath oppressed any, hath not [§] withholden the pledge, neither hath spoiled by violence, [l]but hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment,

17 That hath taken off his hand from the poor, that hath not received usury nor increase, hath executed my judgments, hath walked in my statutes; [o]he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, [p]he shall surely live.

18 As for his father, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, [q]even he shall die in his iniquity.

19 ¶ Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes, and hath done them, he shall surely live.

20 The [t]soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: [x]the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him.

21 ¶ But [y]if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, [z]and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, [b]he shall surely live, he shall not die.

22 All his transgressions that he hath committed they shall not be mentioned unto him: [d]in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live.

23 Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord GOD; and [f]not that he should return from his ways, and live?

24 But when the righteous turneth away [4] from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: [k]in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die.

25 ¶ Yet ye say, The way of the LORD is not equal. Hear now, O house of Israel, [m]Is not my way equal? [n]are not your ways unequal?

26 When [o]a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die.

27 Again, [p]when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, [q]he shall save his soul alive. [5]

28 Because he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

29 Yet saith the house of Israel, [t]The way of the LORD is not equal. O house of Israel, are not my ways equal? are not your ways unequal?

30 Therefore [u]I will judge you, O house of Israel, [x]every one according to his ways, saith the Lord GOD. Repent, and turn [‖]yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin.

31 ¶ Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and [b]make you a new heart and a new spirit: [c]for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

32 For [d]I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord GOD: wherefore turn yourselves*, and live ye.

CHAP. XIX.

A lamentation for the princes of Israel, under the parable of lions' whelps taken in a pit, 1-9; for Jerusalem, by a wasted vine, 10-14.

MOREOVER, [a]take thou up a lamentation for [b]the princes of Israel,

2 And say, What is thy mother? [c]A lioness: [1] she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among [d]young lions.

3 And she brought up one of her whelps: [2] [e]it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey; it devoured men.

4 The nations also heard of him; [f]he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains unto the land of Egypt.

5 Now, when she saw that she had waited, and her hope was lost, then she took [g]another of her whelps, [3] and made him a young lion.

6 And [h]he went up and down among the lions, he became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey, and devoured men.

7 And he knew their *desolate palaces, and he laid waste their cities; [i]and the land was desolate, and [k]the fulness thereof, by the noise of his roaring.

8 Then [l]the nations set against him on every side from the provinces, [m]and spread their net over him: he was taken in their pit.

9 And they put him in ward in [†]chains, [n]and brought him to the king of Babylon: they brought him into holds, [o]that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.

10 ¶ Thy [p]mother is [q]like a vine in thy [‡]blood, planted by the waters: [r]she was fruitful, and full of branches, by reason of many waters.

11 And [s]she had strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule, and [t]her stature was exalted among the thick branches, [4] and she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches.
